Chap.15. | Henrie V. ENGLANDS MONARCHS. Monarch 52. The King willing- heard by the English King, burvpon new displeafures for some losse of men in the Territories of Roane, the motion at that time was dasht, and would not proceed, least (as King Henriealleaged) the Frenth should suppose that a small losse had weakened his spirits: yet the Emperour continuing his intercession for peace, had brought it to that passe by his pithy periwalions, as had not the Frenchat that verie instant besieged Harstew both by Sea and land, it had beene effected. (34) For not long before Thomas Earle of Dor A.D. 1415. fet, hauing made a roade into the County of Canx, was fet vpon by the Earle of Armigrace Constable of France with other ftrong men at Armes neere vnto Vademont, who so distressed the English, that Dorfe tooke into a Garden for defence, and having had private conference there with the Conflable, early before day, departed with the loffe of * foure hundred men. Armigrace puffed vp by his got victory, with his French powers followed the English in a hasty march toward Harstew, and vpon the lands intercepted their passage, where betwixt them a cruell conflict was perfourmed, with the ouerthrow of the French, and flight of the Constable, who retired to Monstrevillier for safety. (35) This his valucky attempt he tooke greatly to heart, and therefore purpoling to repurchale again his honor, he determined for Harflew, where hee fet downe his land fiege, before the English Garrison within, were well aware, when also the Vicount Narbon Vice-Admiral of France, with a Fleete of tall flips entred the hauen, so that the Towne was begint on enery fide as we have faid. King Henry hearing of these newes, called home his Ambassadours, which were the Bishop of Normich and Sir Thomas Erpingham in commission then at Beauueis, and in conference for a Peace; and the Emperour well perceiving that the French plaid vpon advantage, and that King Henry was not of temper to turne edge at their strokes, faw it vaine to prosecute the peace for France further, and therefore fought to enter league with the English himselfe, vnto the which King Henry was fo willing as he confirmed the same upon these Articles following, (36) That the faid Emperour & King, their heires & fucceffours * should be friends each to other as Allies and Confederates against all manner of persons of what estate or degree focuer, the Church of Rome. and the Pope for the time being only excepted (for he was the Maker Beethat then lead the fwarme.)

(37) That neither themselues, their heires nor fucceffours fhould be present in Counsell or other place, where either of them their heires or fucceffours might fuftaine dammage in lands, goods, honours , states or persons : and that if any of them should understand of losse or hinderance to be like to fall or happen to the others, they should impeach the same, or if that lay not in their powers, they should advertise the others thereof with all convenient speed. That either of them, their heires and fucceffours should advance the others honour and commodity without any fraud or deceit. That neither of them, nor their heires or fucceffours should permit their subjects to leavy warres against the others. That it should be lawfull and free for each of their subjects to passe into the others Countrey, and there to remaine and make merchandize either by Sea or land, paying the Customes, gables, and duties due and accustomed according to the Laws, and Ordinances of the places, and Countreyswhere they should traffique. That neither of the saide Princes, nor their heires, nor fucceffors should receine any rebell, banished man, or traitour of the others willingly, but should cause eueric such person to avoid out of their Countreys, Realmes, dominions, and Jurisdictions. That neither of the said Princes, their heires nor Successors should begin any other watres against any other person, other then fuch as they had warres with at that present without defence of themselucs, their Countreys and subjects in case of inuation made upon them. That it should be lawfull for the King of England to profecute his warres against France for the recourry of his right, as should seeme to him expedient, and for the Emperour, for the recourry of any part of his right receined by the French. Laftly, that either of them should assist other in recovery and Conquest of their rights, lands and dominions, withheld and kept from them, by him that calleth himfelfe King of France, and othets, the Princes and Barons of France. These conclusions and agreements bare date the 19 of October , in Anno 1416. In the meane while the French that had felt the hard hand of the English, and feeing that Henry had with-drawne his commissioners for peace, King Charles made a league with the flates of Genota, requiring their aide against this dan-gerous enemic, who supplyde him with sixehundred Croffe-bowes, and eight tall ships of warre, and as many gallies with munition and victuals. These wafting the Seas with many brauadoes, King Henrie in perion meant to have mette with himseife, but the Emperour diffwading his purpole, the charge of that Enterprize was committed to John Duke of Bedford, accompanyde with the Earles of March, Marfball, Oxford, Warwicke, Huntington, Arundell, Deuon-fbire, and Salisbury; these falling vpon the County of Narbon, a fierce encounter was begun, and long fought, till at length the victory fell to the English. fo that the French Nany was most of them battered, funcke and taken 3 amongst others three great Carricks of the Geneaes were sent to England, with whom the bastard of Burbon was brought away Prisoner; & the Viscount de Narbon, Le Sire de Montaine, and Le Sire de Berrar chased into Britaine. This victorie obtained; the Duke past forward to the Towne of La Mer des Hife Harflew, and refreshed it with victuals without anie impeachment; for Armagnae the Constable hearing how his Conforts had kept tune on the Seas thought it not best to set to their note, least his meane would not be heard, the base of this musicke soun ding too deepe, and therefore he put up his pipes and got him to Paris. This service perfourmed was to commended by the Emperour, as he openly faid, that Realme was happy that had fuch a King but the King more happie that had fuch Subjects, and cuer after held Bedford in a most speciall ac-

(38) His affaires now finished, and Princely entertainements thankefully received, he prepares for his returne toward Germany, and King Henry to doe him the more honour would needs accompany him to his Towne of Callis, whither after their arrivals the Duke of Burgognerepayred to doe his homage vnto the Emperour, which Burgoone some moneths before, had concluded a peace with the Earle of Warwick in the behalfe of King Henry, for the Counties of Flaunders and Arthois. Henry therefore in hope of a further friendship with him, sent his brother the Duke of Glocester, and the Earle of March vnto Saint Omers to lye hostages with the County Charrolois, for Burgognes paffage and fafe returne, with whom hee fent warwicke to conduct him to

(49) His entertainement was honourable both The Duke of by the Emperour and King, which as acceptably he Bargande doth homoge to the Emperour and received, and vnto Sigifmand performed his homage, and with Henry renewed the truce for the time of two yeres, both which were so distastine to the French with K. Hemie. ftomackes, that the Emperour is taxed, he came not with an intent to worke the good of France, but rather to augment her miferies by animating Burgundy to bandy against Orleance: and that King Henry was puft with an humor of pride, his affaires to profperous against a weake King. But this busines ended, Burgundy returned to Graveling, Henry into Eng. land, and the Emperour toward Germany, being waf ted into the low Countreys with the Kings Fleete Shee was his Queene two yeeres, and about three months, and furniting him, was remarried vnto owen Theodore of Wales, vnto whom thee bare three fonnes, Edmund, Iasper, and Owen, and a daughter who liued not long. Owen tooke the habite of religion at Westminster , the other two by King Henry the fixt (their halfe brother,) were honorably preferred . Edmund was created Earle of Richmond, and marrying Margaret, the fole heire of John Beaufort Duke of Sommerfet, was father by her vnto Henry (the only heire of Lancaster,) afterwards King of England. Iasper, the second brother was created the same yeere, Earle of Pembroke, who required his brothers kindnes

HENRIE THE SIXTH, KING OF Monarch 93 ENGLAND, AND FRANCE, LORD

OF IRELAND, THE THREE AND FIFT IETH MO-NARCH OF ENGLAND, HIS RAIGNE. ACTS, AND ISSVE.

CHAPTER XVI.

Ad God almighty (the *giuer and transferrer of Kingdomes) thought good that the English should have settled in the Continent of Europe, and nor haue beene fhutte vp within their Ilands, hee would not fo foone have deprined them of their late incomparable Captaine and Soueraigne Henry the fifth. But it seemes that God having humbled she French Nation under Henries victorious hand, ment now again to restore them to his wonted fauor by taking away their terrour & triumpher, substituting his fon(an Infant) in his place, Henrie of that name the 6.born at Windfor, who was crowned about the eight month of his age. The prety hands which could not feed himselfe, were yet made capable to weeld a scepter, and heethat was beholding to nurfes for milke, did neuerthelesse distribute the fustes nance of law and inflice to so great and warlike Nations. Counsell supplies the defect of age. At his fathers death hee had vncles, menofapproued valour and differeion, to whom the principall care of all publike affaires by the fathers laft prouisons was committed. Humfrey Duke of Glasefler (theyonger brother of two)had the * gouernement of England entrusted to his fidelity: the regency of France was affigned for Pronince to John Duke of Bedford, the eldest lining vncle of the King, as to a Prince of much magnanimity, prowelfe and felicitie in conduct, with whom was rioyned Philip Duke of Burgundie. The guard and custody of the royal! Infant was assigned to Thomas Duke of Excester : the nurture and education to his * mother, the Queene Downger: vpon billing. the two vncles (as betweene the two Poles of the Englis Empire) the whole globe of gouernment moued: whatfocuer is done by the kingly power is faid to be done by the King. We shall behold notwithstanding in the tragical glasse of this Henries raigne, how farre the imbecility of the kingly perfon may affect the body politicke with good or euill. If histories were ordayned to stirre affections, not to teach and instruct, neuer any Princes raigne fince the Conquest did better deserue to bee described with a tragical ftyle and words of horror & forrow, although the beginning (like the faire morning of a most tempestuous day) promised nothing morethen a continuance of paffed felicities. (2) For the State of the English affaires was great and flourishing, England without turnult, the naturall fierce humors of her people confuming or exer-cifing themselues in France, and France herselfe (for the nobler parts together with the grand City of Paris head of that Monarchie) was at their denotion. There wanted nothing which might advance the worke begunne. Most noble and expert Leaders as those which had bin fathioned in the schoole of warre, under the best martiall master of that age, the late Hemy, arms full of veterant fouldiers, most of which were of skill sufficient to be commanders themselues: their friends sirme, no defect nor breach (by which dissipation might enter to the ouerthrow of the English greatnesse) as yet disclosing themselues. Wildome, pierie, riches, forwardnesse at home, courage and like forwardnesse abroad. It is a fruitfull speculation to consider how God carrieth his part in the workes of men, alwaies inftly, fometimes terribly, but neuer otherwise, then to bring all worldly greatnesse and glory into due contempt, and loathing, that the soule may bee erected to her Creator, and aspire to a Crown celestiall. The first disaduantage which hapned to the English cause (after the late Kings decease) was the death of Charles the French King, who furnised the other but *fiftie and three dayes. This wee may worthily call the first (as it was a great, aswell as the first) disaduantage, for the imbecilities of that Prince were a stregth to the English; On the other side (God observing a talio and parilitie) the infancy of young Henry was an advantage to Charles the Daulphin of France, now by them of his faction called King of France, as the English vied in derifion to enftyle him King of Ber-

(3) In England (whose condition the order of na-A Parliament at rure wils vs first to describe, because there was the scat of counsell, by which all the actions of the generall state were directed) a Parliament was affembled to establish the Crownevpon the Infant, and to prouide for the publike vies and necessities of The leuie ther- State. Money (alwayes one of them) was liberalby granted. It was a frange fight(and the first time that euer it was seen in England) which in the next yeere hapned, an infant fitting in the mothers lap, of was 5.Nobles on enery facke of before it could tell what English meant, to exercise the place of Soueraigne direction in open Parliament. Yet foit was, for the Queene to illumine that publike convention of States with her Infants presence, removed from Windfor to London; through which Citie (her selfe roially seated with her young fonne vpon her lappe) passed in maiesticke manner to Westminster, and there tooke seate among all his

Lords, whom (by the ordinary mouth of that high Court) hee saluted and spake to them at large con-

(4) The Duke of Bedford (as the nature of his place exacted) to fettle and preferue the State of France for his young Nephew the King, together with Philip Duke of Burgoigne, who as yet continued a stedfast friend to the English Soucraignety (knowing the Daulphin busie to recouer France) strengthned the confines of their gouernment with Garrisons, afsembled their powers, and laboured to retaine the hearts of their owne party. The Duke of Bedford Regent of France, had * words to them to this effect in open affemble. That they should not violate their plighted and sworne alleagiance, neither by them-Selues endeauour nor endure, that by others their Soucraigne Lord young Henry (bould be defrauded of his inheritance, or that the hatreds and comities which now begame to die betweene the French and English names; (hould through the practices of most faithlesse men berenued, and reinflamed: That they would remember how (by Gods speciall favour and goodnesse) the two Kingdoms of France and England were united under one mol faire and goodly Monarchicin an eternall league, and lately so established that no hamane force could refist . That albest they had sustained dammage by the warre, yet the same would be recovered with advantage, if they honored loued and obeyed their lawfull Soueraigne Lord King Henry, and profecuted his enemies with extremity, according to bounden duty. This Oration found plaufible admission in shew: Henry is proclaimed King of England and of France, and fuch chiefes as were present did their homages, taking oath to be true: The like Obligation and Sacrament of alleagiance was put vpon all the French through the English Dominions in France. (5) Charles (who as fonne and heire to the late of Charles the feuenth) being then about the feauen and twentieth yeere of his age, full of courage and new hopes, gathered what force he could; his chiefe Leuies were made in Daulphynois and Italy, from whence(for money)he drew fundry troupes. But the best finews of his Army moued in certain thoufands of the Scotifb Nation, which ferued under him. The first steppe which the Charolines, or forces of Charles made into hostile action was unfortunate, for comming to raife the fiege which the English held about * Crepan they were put to flight, with the loffe of about two thousand of their numbers. This was noble in Charles, and his Charolines, that their minds funke notat the horrour of fuch an euill omen. It was faith Emplius of them, refounded to encounter ad-uerfe fortune with encresse of courage. The Regent on the other side was vigilant upon all occasions: the power of his Regency extended it felfe without contradiction * through Vimew, Pontieu and Picardie, from Paris to Reines, Chalons and Troyes, up to the water of Logr and the Sea: A goodly scope of territory, and absolutely the best of France. That late losse & soile of the Charolines was repaired thorrly after by an ouerthrow in skirmish which they gaue to the English party, from whom (with the flaughter of about fifteene hundreth)they recourred a great booty, specially of Cattel which the English had gotten in the Countries of Nugion and Main, but thus intercepted voon their return into Normandy. Charles (which Paul Emplies omitteth) doubteth that successe; for * Meulan vpon Sein is by him taken where all the Polyd. Forg. 1.33 Englifb are put to the fword : but the possession was thort, and the reuenge speedy : Thomas Montacute Earle of Salisbury (a man (faith Polydor) more like the old Romans then people of that age, so great was his vertue and cheualrie) hauing with him Iohn of Luxemburg, Generall of the Burgundian horsemen, reco-uers the place, killing all the French which were found therein.

(6) At the Citie of * Amiens in Picardie the three great Dukes of Bedford (Regent of France) Burgoign and Britaine meet to consult of the whole course & fumme of affaires. There they renued the League, adding, that each should be others friend, and that all of them should defend King Henries right with their best forces. For the better assurance of this profitable amity, the Regent (then a Bachelour) tooke to wife the Lady Anne, filter to Philip Duke of Burgundie: while the Regent was ablent from Paris vpon thele iust occasions, the Parisians (who not long before had * fent Ambaffadors into England, to acknowledge their obedience to King Henry) practifed with Charles to deliuer their City. The Regent had no-tice of this dangerous treason, and with his presence retained them in ducty. The chiefe Actors paied their lines for satisfaction of the trespasse. In good

All things certainly favoured the French designes; for this was the generall estate of the English affaires. King Henry scarce out of his Child-hood; and when he came to mans age, not Man enough to manage fo turbulent occurrents; the Princes of the blood weakely vnited in love, for the common good; the Protector vigilant ouer England, the Regent carefull for France, but both privately enuied; Richard Duke of Yorke (whose strengths daily increased, which in time he meant nothing leffe then to vie for the be-nefit of King Henry,) ambitioully referring himfelfe for a deare day; most of the great warriours slaine; and in briefe a great inability (forwant of a Soule, willing and fit to looke fo sterne and dismall aduentures in the face) through the whole body of the English forces; which though otherwise they might haue lingred out the warre, and kept their footing, yet the death of the great Duke of Bedford Regent of France doubled the difficulty, or rather the impossibility. In taking this triumphant Peere away, God made it manifest, that he held the English vnworthy and vnfit to continue their Empire among the French any longer. This Prince not long after this reuolt of Duke Philip, died at * Paris, vncertaine to some, whether through griefe of the euils he forefaw, or other malady. But the Avalogy and colour of his whole former life, doth contradict, their conceit, who think that fuch a grief should determine his daies, because it could not but proceed from a kind of feare and despaire, an humor absolutely opposite to Magnanimitie, wherein hee abounded. most Princely words. (26) What honor shall it be to us, or you, to breake this Asonument, and to pull out of the ground the bones King Lewis his Princely telli-mony of the late Regents vertues, of him dead, whom in his life-time, neither my father, nor your Progenitors with all their puissance, were once able to make flie one foot backward? who by his strength pollicie, and wit kept them all out of the principall dominions of the Realme of France, and out of this noble Dutchy of Normandy? wherefore I say first, God saue his soule; and let his body now lie in rest : which when he was aliue. would have disquieted the proudest of vs all: And as for the toombe, I assure you, it is not so worthy, or convenient as his honor and acts deferued.

(27) The Regent being now dead, the late peace made at Arras betweene King Charles and Philip Duke of Burgundie, presently disclosed, and put forth effects most dangerous to the English; for many Townes voluntarily yeeld, and multitudes of the French (who hitherto through feare contained themselues) starting away , all the English dominions were full of private conventicles, practifes, and correspondences with the Enemy. Such English as then were in France, are not altogether floathfull, but yet, through a fatall either fecurity or negligence at home, there was not speedy sufficiencies of resiftance ministred. Richard Duke o

(28) Richard Duke of Yorke, (whose services neucr did good to the English common-wealth) is created Regent of France, and Edmund Duke of Sommerlet (his perpetuall riual, or perhaps an intelligent cenfor of his manners) continues his commands in Normandie. The Duke of sommerfet* opposed the aduancement of Yorke to that slipperie dignity. He was no babe in fo doing, but more fore-feeing then the Protector, and all the Councell of England. Yet his opposition was vnseasonable, and fruitlesse, for the others carriage had woonne fuch a party about the King, (whom he meant by embracing to pull down) that notwithstanding the disaduantage of his silenced title, which was alone agreat cause to have made him enertaftingly incapable of so great trust and meanes, he prevailed. But before he could arrive, Paris was loft, Robert Lord Willoughby was Gouernour there for the English, who had with him but about two thousand, the faith of the Citizens was presumed vpon to make vp the rest at a pinch, for a common resistance. On the contrary, they perceiuing vpon what termes the English affaires stood in France, chiefly after the late Regents death, conspire against them. The treason was carried so cunninglie by some of the principall Magistrates of the Towne, who capitulated for a generall pardon from King Charles (which was gladly yeelded vnto,) that the mischiefe sooner tooke effect, then it could be discouered. Thomas Lord Beaumont began the losse with his miffortune; for Arthur Earle of Richmond, Constable of France, houering about Paris, in hope to recouer the same, the Lord Beaumont with certaine toreconer the same, the Lord Beammont with tertainte hundreth of English, fell into his danger about Saint Denis, and were diffressed. While as yet the terror of this discomfiture (not great in regard of the numbers flaine, but in regard of the Circumftances) was freshest, the French advance their Banners up to the City, where a gate was opened vnto them by their partifans. What should the English doe in this generall mischiese ? The townesmen, lately vassals, turne enemieson a fodaine: women and children affaile the English from their windowes with all forts of misfill things. Many are beaten downe and maffacred in the streetes. Some will thinke that the Lord willoughby, and his people might have done more nobly, to have taken vp their graves in the place which they preteded to make good against the French. Fortitude is neuer separated from Prudence, Succour was despaired. The Duke of Torke was not as yet arrived, and in maintaining their strengthes against the whole City of Paris, and all the present French forces for the space of about ten dayes, they sufficiently cleared themselves both in point of honour and loyalty. Paris * is thus loft in the worst time for an Army to march in. by the Duke of Somerfets emulations, which some affirme, as by the very quality of the winter weather) arriued afterward, accompanied with the Earles of Salisbury and Suffolke, the Lord Falconbridge, and other worthy perions, with an Army of eight thoufand men. But this Regent did neuer good in France; Hee who so writes, might have also safely added nor elsewhere. The English affaires were not as yet come to the very breake-necke point. They held (in the late conquered parts of France) Normandy entire, though not without much trouble; for the people againe rebell in Caux: but that mischiefe was destroied with the greater and more mercileffe confusion of the Authors and Actors, then the former. A bout fine thousand of them were trampled to death by the just fury of the English, under the leading of the Lord Scales, the Lord Houand others. They burnt all their dwellings, made booty of their goods, draue their whole numbers out of the Country. The Lord Seales not long after discomfitted La Hire, and his Companie not farre from Roan. The war was handled on all fides without full or complete armies, Skirmishes were the ordinarie formes of fighting, The French were schooled from setling their rest vpon a pitcht field. Thus houered the affaires. (30) Philip Duke of Burgoigne had as yet in person ginen no proof against the English of his affection to

Calais befreged by the Bargun enterprise worthy of that expectation, the recovery > stilla friend to the English, in making choice of a seruice, wherein hee was most likely to waste, his time in vaine, and yet make thew of much forwardnesse; but hee was reall, though the rather stirred therunto by the desire of private revenge. The Eng-4/b, vpon his forfaking their alliance, had attempted to kindle the Gauntois, and other of the Flemile townes (Subiects to the Duke) to rife in rebellion: but the opinion that K. Henries fortunes in France were desperately stooping, made their wils too dank to take fire. The notice not with standing of this attempt came to the Duke, which sharpened him to reuenge, whereof (as the former passages abundantly declare) hee was not ordinarily thirfty. He brings his Armie before Calais. Chiefe commanders there for King Henry were the L. Dudley who had charge of the Castell, and Sir John Rateliffe of the Towne. The Dukes purpose was to have cloyed the harbour by finking thippes laden with frones, and fuch like choaking materials; but vpon the cbbe-water the Califians delivered the haven from that perill. The King of England advertised that his precious Fort and Towne of Calair were thus emperilled, Humfrey Duke of Glocester the Protector comes in person with a very great Fleete (some write fine hundreth faile) to the rescue, and in it a great puisfance, with full purpose to give battell, glad perhaps that hee might now reuenge old grudges. It is able to moue choler, to confider how Writers torture vs with the diverfities of reports; but the generall agreement is, that the Duke of Burgundy did raise his liege before he was fought with. Some fay the very rumor of the Protettors approach drawe him away, and that the Protector came the next day after the Burgundians flight. Others excuse him (probably enough) in faying that the Flemings grew vnweildie to his commandements, and would needes

But the English were thought to have created ftore of worke for this busie Duke at home where many great tumults role, in * one of which, his owne person was endangered at Bruges, Liste Adam the Captaine of his guard being there prefently flaine. Hence it came perhaps that a meane was found by contracts made with I fabel the Dutcheffe his third wife (a most wirty woman a Portugetse) to hold a league with England, and yet no breach with France.

(52) These haue hitherto beene theactions of Men, let vs not neglect two great Ladies, because much concerning our historic depend on their courfes. Queene Katherine, the widdow of King Henrie the fifth, and mother by him of this fixth Henrie, about this time departed out of the world. This most noble Lady, when her husband the King was dead, being not of judgement (by reason of her tender yeeres to understand what became her greatnes, or having found perhaps that greatnes was no part of happinelle,) fecretly marrieth one owen ap T heedore or Teder * the most noble and most goodlie gentleman of all the Welf nation, and endued with admirable vertues, who drew his descent from holie Cadwallader, laft King of the Britaines. This husband had by her fundry children, two of which, Edmund and Gafper doe beare a part in the royall history, and King Henry the fixth (their halfe brother) created the first of them Earle of Richmond, the other of Pembroke. This Edmund is he, who by Margaret the daughter of Iohn Duke of Somerset, (grandechilde to Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster) had Henry the 7. the most famous and prudent King of England. (33) In that yeare in which this excellent Queen died, the young Dutchesse Dowager of Bedford (wid dow to the late Regent of France) married also (be low her degree) a vigorous English Knight, one * Sir Richard Woodnile, of which match yet Serres needed not to have spoken so contemptibly, calling him an English adventurer, of small account; shee thereby (faith he) gitting cause to laugh at her: which centure tafteth perhaps of the French leuen and preiudice, because the Lady was lister to the Earle of S Paul, who would not make one in the peace of Ar ras, but held with the English,

(34) But let vs fee the fequell. Out of this Matrimony also sprung Queenes; for her husband (af-terward made Earle of Rivers) had sundry children by her, whereof Elizabeth being one, had the honour to marry Edward the fourth King of England, and hereby was both herselse a Queene and a Progenitresse of those glorious Kinges and Queenes which followed for from her and this match sprang another Elizabeth, the renowned wife of King Henry the seauenth as King Henry himselfedid of the former: both those marriages proued most fortunate to England: but another marriage which then threatned present danger to King Henry, was that which Tames the first King of Scots made with France, who gaue his daughter the Lady Margaret, to Lewis the Daulphin for wife, and fent new supplies of men against the English: hee meant also to have attempted some personall hostility, but that hee was most wickedly murthered by certaine bloudy Traitors in Lilli

The fore-runner whereof was a Comet, or blazing starre, which appeared in the moneth of Iune, the beams whereof extended themfelues into the fouth. The first popular act of this affembly, was to restore the memory of Humfrey Duke of Glocester to honour, declaring him to have beene a true Subject to the King and Realme. made, were for themselves, and their owne security, willing and commanding that the Duke of Yorke & his partakers (bould incur no blame by reason of the tour. ney at Saint Albans: the whole fault whereof was laid upon the dead Duke of Sommerfet, the Lord Chiefe Baron, and one William 'ofeph Esquier, who (say they) kept from the King a pacificatory letter which the Duke of Yorke had fent. It is a wonder and a shame to reade how officiously these violent Lords (meaning nothing leffe) behaued themselues to the King, of whose maicsty they will needs seeme to be the onely Champions and conservators. The Duke of Torke in the same Parliament creates himselfe Protector of England, the Earle of Salisbury is made Lord Chancellour, and the Earle of Warwicke (his

And albeit his words intended no treason, (the Grocer not once dreaming to touch King Edwards title)yet the time being when the Crowne lay at stake, the tenture of the Law made them his death. This rough beginning moued many to doubt, that they had wronged themselves in wronging King Henry which opinion was more confirmed in that hee retained * a great fumme of money borrowed of the Staplers-Merchants, and disburfed in his affaires, whose restitution he veterly denyed with an austere commandement to furcease the demand. But hearing how Henry was beloued in the North, & what followers were gathered to recouer him the Crown, vpon the twelfth of March with a complete Armie hee sets forth of London, accompanied with his brethren, and many other Nobles: with whome marching towards Pomfreit, he there appoints the Lord Fitzmater to keepe the passage of Ferribity, o-mitting no directions of a worthy commander.

and themselves would undergo the charge and burden thereof, by whose valor and power, they doubted not to daunt the pride of the vourping Edward; who now held himselfe sure, and beganne to grow careleffe. To these their resolutions the warlike Queene most gladly contented, and gaue all encouragements vnto them shee could; when falling in counsell how to proceed, her care (according to the natural affection of a mother) was most upon the fafcty and life of her fonne; and therefore aiwel for their owne parts (if fortune flould faile in this their first attempt) as for the feare which the Yorkift would possesse (who whiles Prince Edward his cor-riuali hued could not account the Diadem his Bride) sheethought it best to send him backe againe into France, till God had fet the Crowne where it should stand: whence heemight supply them with new forces, or at least wife ouer-awe Edward for tyrannizing too farre. But the Lords contrariwife allead-ged, that Prince Edward being the morning Sunne of the Lancastrians hopes, and the raves very splendent to most English eyes, was to be present in field himselfe, whose sight would both heat the courage of his owne Souldiers, and attract the glance of his aduerfaries hearts, either to fight faintly, or elfe, and that rather to come to his fide. Thus their counsel at that time preuailed; and thus refolued, every man departed to make ready his power, the Queene with in reft, before hee heard of Queene Margarets arriuage, and the confluence of people out of Cornwall, Deuonsbire, and of the Westerne parts, which houre-ly flew to giue her assistance; wherefore committing to the Tower King Henry, and George Archbi-shoppe of Torke with a selected company, he marched to meet them, intending to cut off many fprings before they should toyne to the body of a river, whose streams without danger could not be passed: therefore from windser, Abington, Chichester, and Mamesbury hee proceeded, feeking and vrging his enemies to battell: but the Queene and her forces fearing to abide in Bath, remoued to Briston, Berkeley, and Gloceller, and laftly at Tewkesbury, Duke Sommerfet her Generall puched down his Tents not flaying the comming of the Earle of Pombroke: his battell he marshalled into three fights, whereof himfelfe and his brother John Lord Sommer fee lead the foreward; the middle Battalion was commanded by Baward the young Prince, under the conduct of the Lords Saint Iohn and Wenlocke, and the Rereward governed by John Courtney Earle of Denonshire.

(;o) King Edward who was come now within light of his enemies, divided likewife his Army into Battalions, comitting the Foreward vnto the guidance of his brother Richard D. of Glacefler a good Souldier, and of a deepe reach and policy: the Main hee undertooke to governe himfelte, and the Rereward was commanded by the Lord Hallings his Chamberlaine. The field thus marshalled, and the figne of battell being given, a most blondy fight be-ganne, the King had planted his Ordinance at most advantage, which Gloseller frankly bestowed among the Dukes men, and they lodged betwirt ditches, bushes and hedges, with their showers of arrowes galled Glocesters followers, so as by his command his battell gaue backe, as though they would shrinke, which Sommer fet no fooner perceiued, but that be

With these two Lords died twelne worthy Knights, befides others of inferior degrees. (73) Then was Proclamation made for the apprehension of Prince Edward, promising to his taker an annuitie of an hundred pounds during his life, & if the Prince were lining, his life to be spared, vpon which promiles Sir Richard Crofts prefented young Prince Reward Edward vnto the King, whom with a sterne counte-nance hee a while beheld, and as sternely demanded, how he durft to prefumptuously with Banner difplayed enterinto his Realmes, wherunto the Prince made this reply; to recouer (faid bee) my fathers Kingdomes and his most rightfull inheritance possessed by his Father and Grandfather, and from him immediately belonging vnto me; how dareft thou then which are his Subject display thy colour against him thy Liege-Lord? which answere moued King Edward to much, as with his Gantlet hee dalked the Prince on his mouth, whom Richard Duke of Glocefer with others of the kings feruans most shamefully murchered, euen in his presence, and at his feete: whose body was buried without all solemnity among other poorcand meane persons, in the church of the Monastery of the Blacke-Fryers in Temberburie.

(74) Queene Margaret in this fatall day of battell fled towards Worcefter, and by the way tooke into a poore religious house in that her present diftreffe : but three dayes after fhee was apprehended and brought vnto worsefter: to King Edward, who committed her to fore and firaite keeping, in which City she a while remained But sodain news brought him, that the Northern men were in Armes, and meant to adventure for her liberty, the Conquerous marched to Couentrie, and there made preparation further to proceed: which when thefe hote fpires pefectly understood, their courages grew.colder, & their weapons cast away, they came thronging to Edward to offer him fubicction; yet the Lancastrians were not fo minded, but rather insended once The Northerne more to trie whether fortune would afford them her K. Edward.

(75) A fitte instrument they had to forward the enterprise, namely Thomas Nemil bastard Fancou-bridge sonne of Lord Fancoubridge Earle of Kent, a great supporter of King Edwards Crowne: howbeit this Bastard being a man of a turbu'ent spirit, bridge Capting and forward for action, Earle Warming had made of the Langlei him his Admirall to keepe the narrow feas, that none fhould have way to strengthen King Edward which his office he executed beyond his Commitsion, and became a taker of all Merchants goods, being aided with 300. Malecontents from Calleis.

Chap.17. | Edward IIIJ. ENGLANDS MONARCHS. Monarch 54. (76) His enterprise desperate, and his name growne fearefull at sea, hee meant to make it no lesse on the land; for putting in at Douer, many misgouerned and loose personsdayly drew to him, so as his power grew to bee seuenteene thousand strong with these through Kent he made his way towards London, meaning to doe much, the land so molested with intestine warres; and lodging his hoast on the Southfide of London, commanded the Cirizens to gine him accesse, that with King Henry (whom hee meant to release from the Tower) he might passe through their streetes, to meet and encounter the viurping Edward. But the Londoners knowing the rudenesse of these Rakehels kept their gates shut and garded the same with sufficient strengthes: whence fome Lords of the royali bloud therein residing, sent vnto Edward of their present danger, who presently fent them fifteene hundred of his best Souldiers, after whomin person hee warily marched, leading with him his prisoner Queene Margaret, whose bounds hee well knew, gaue him the full scope of (77) Fauconbridge in the meane while thirsting after spoile with his shippes secured the Thamesis ato polic with in impress returned the 1 moment aboue S. rour Edward with his Caprine Queen Margaret entred London, and so into the Tower the one in pomp commanding the place at his pleasure, the other in reares to remaine a most pensive prisoner, where her husband, the downcast King Henry was kept in hard durance. The place being thus charged with the presence of two Kings and their Queens: the Crokebacke of Glosefter intended to cleare by taking him away, that flood in his brothers way, whose successor as is thought hee then meant to bee; and making his inward mind more deformed then were his outward lineaments, without regard of bloud-defiled hands Kir g Heary the thered in the Tower by Reb-ard Duke of flabbed the most innocent Henry to the heart with his dagger, in which act at once beganne the ones happy rest, and the others foule guilt, which accompanied his confcience to the day of his death. (79) The body of this murthered King was vp-on the Acception Euclaide in an open Coffin, and K. Henry carri bare-faced through the fireetes of Lanfrom the Tower guarded with many bils and glaues, was fo carryed through the fireetes vnto the Cathe-

red one day, and beganne to bleed againe afresh, a forrowfull spectacle to most of the beholders, and thence was it carried to the Blacke-Fryers Church where it likewise lay bare faced, and bled as before, all men being amazed at the forrowfull fight, and lastly, it was put in a boat without Priest, Clerke, Torch or Taper, finging or faying, and was ferried wnto the Abbey of Cherifey in Surrey, & there without pompe enterred. But afterwards King Henry the seventh translated his body vnto his Castle of windser, where in a new Tombe at the entrance into the Chancell of the Chappell, and fouth dore of the Quier, it was princely bestowed, but fince the Tombe is remoued, and where the Corps is now laid is not vulgarly knowne. (80) Thus lived and thus dyed this innocent and inft King, who had beene proclaimed in his Cradle, crowned in his Infancy, and agains at more age had the Emperial Diadem of France fet on his head, lining vprightly, louing his Subjects, and raigning thirty eight yeeres, was in that time toffed with variable successe, for twice he was imprisoned, and deprined of his Crowne; betrayed, mitten, and wonnded, and in all things became a worthy example of fortunes vnconstancy : hee was of stature very seemly, of body flender, of face beautifull, and by a naturall inclination abhorred all vice, farre from pride, given to prayer, well read in the Scriptures, ving K.Hom. works of Charity, and so chast, as no suspition of incontinency could be conceined in him: nay, for farre to the contrary, that when certaine Ladies precented themselues before him in a maske, with their haire loofe, and their breafts vncoueted (hee then a Halinfeet, Bachelour, and able of matriage) hee immediately rose vp, and departed the presence, saying, sie, sie, for footh yee are to blame. Oath he yied none, but in weighty matters, his affirmation was for footh. and forfooth, very mercifull to the poore, and fo pictifull to Malefactors, as he commanded the quarters of Traitors to be taken downe from the Gates, and buried, and so farre from reuenge, that hee willingly pardoned the greatest offences against him; for a Ruffian intending his death, wounded him in the fide with his fword, what time he lay prisoner in the Tower, and being restored to his kingly estate; he freely forgaue the fact; and another like Russian striking him on the face, hee punished with this onely reprebension, for footh you are to blame to strike mee your annointed King : for thele and his other patient vertues, King Henry the 7. affayed to haue Comb. Brit.le him canonized a Saint: but Pope Julius the 2.demanding too great a fumme, the King went no further in the fuite: notwithstanding in the repute of the vulgar hee was taken for no lesse, so as his red hat which hee had worne, healed the head-ach, when it was put on, as the fimple beleeved. (81) The monument of his zeale to true piety, and care for posterities, are his famous Colledges of Eaton and Cambridge, the Chappell of which last, shewes the magnificence that the whole should have beene of, had their Founder raigned to have finished them himfelfe: for the performance whereof hee enfeoffed certaine Bishops with other noble personages by his letters Patents with lands and poffeffions, to the yeerely value of thirty foure hundred pounds very neere : but as his life ended, before that nature had thereunto fet her owne feale; fo thefe remain unperfected of the excellent beauties intended. which their zealous Founder means to have adorned them withall.

EDVVARD THE FIFTH, KING OF ENGLAND AND FRANCE, AND

LORD OF IRELAND, THE FIFTIE FIFTH MO-NARCH OF THIS LAND, HIS RAIGNE, AND DEATH.

For the most part written by Sir Thomas Moore.

CHAPTER XVI II.

He father thus dying in the firength of his yeeres, and the flome left to rule before he was ripe, the Synders of diffentions which the ficke King had lately raked vp, prefently brake forth him to a more raging flame; for the king and Queenes blood that floudd haue fupported young Edwards efface, the one fide being infpicious, and the other prounked by the execrable defire of foueraigmy, left the teacher king (a Prince of finch towardness as his age could conteine) defiture and wnarmed, which if either kind or kindred had holden place, mult needes haue beenet the furch pillars of his defence. The raigne of this King(if we may fo cal the fhort time of his Soueralgny) began the fame day that his father died, though he was never Crowned, nor yet commanded the affaires of the Kingdome as as a biolute Monarch, his young brothers fortunks being ballanced with his, (2) For Rehard Duke of Glaucefler, by nature their wnde, by office their Protector, to their Father could find in his heart fo much mischief to conceive. (3) Know first then that Richard Duke of Yorke, a noble man and a mighty, beganne news by warre, but by law to challenge the Crowne; putting his claime into the Parliament; where his cause was (either for right or fauour) so farre soorth advanced that King Henries blood (albeit he had a goodly Prince) was vtterly reiccted, the Crowne by the authoritie of that high Court intai-led to the Duke of Torke, and his iffue male in remainder, immediately after the death of King Henrie. But the Duke not induring fo long to tarrie, intending under pretext of diffention and debate arifing in the Realme, to prevent his time, and to take vpon him the rule in King Henrics life, was with many other Nobles slaine at wakefield, leaving three ionnes, Edward, George, and Richard; all of them as they were great states of birth, so were they great and stately of stomacke, greedy and ambitious of authority, and impatient of partners.

man this was, and from whom he descended that

(4) For Edward revenging his fathers death deprived king Henry, and attained the Crowne; The second, George Duke of Clarence, was a goodly Noble Prince, and in all things fortunate, if either his owne ambition had not fet him against his brother, or the enuic of his enemies, his brother against him. For were it by the Queen and Lords of her blood which highly maligned the Kings kindred (as women commonly, not of malice but of nature hate them whom their husbands loue) or were it a proud appe tite of the Duke himselfe, intending to be King: at least-wise hainous treason was laid to his charge, and finally were he faulty, were he faultleffe, attainted he was by Parliament, and judged to death, as we have faide. (5) Richard the third fonne, of whom we now entreat was in wit and courage equall with either of them, in body and proweffe farre under them both. little of stature, ill-limmed, and crook-backed, his left thoulder much higher then his right, very hard fauoured of vilage, and fuch as in States is called warly , in other men otherwise : he was malicious , wrathfull, and enuious, yea and from afore his birth euer froward. For it is for truth reported, that the Dutchesse his mother had so much adoe in her tras uaile, that thee could not be deliuered of him vncut, and that he came into the world with his feete forward, as men be borne outward, an 1(as the fame runneth) also not vntoothed; Whether men of hatred report about the truth, or elfe that nature changed her Course in his beginning, which in the course of his life many things vnnaturally committed.

which his disposition was more inclined then for peace; fundry victories he had, and fometimes onerthrowes, but never in default as for his owne person. either of hardines, or politike order; free was he of his dispence, and somewhat about his powerliberall: with large gifts he gate him vnitedfast friendthip, for which he was forced to pill and pole in other places, which gate him fledfast hatred. He was close and secret, a deepe dissembler, lowly of countenance, arrogant of heart, outwardly familiar, where even now he hated, and not letting to kiffe whom he thought to kill; despitefull and cruell he was, not for euill-will alwaies, but oftner for ambition, and either for the furety, or increase of his cltate. Friend and foe was much what indifferent; where his aduantage grew, he spared no mans death, whose life withstood his purpose. He slew with his own hands, King Henrie the fixth, being Prisoner in the Tower, as men constantlie said, and that without comman dement or knowledge of the King, who undoubted-ly if he had intended his death, would have appointed that butcherly office to some other then his owne brother.

(7) Some wife men also judge, that his drift couertly conneied, lacked not in helping forth his brother Clarence to his death; which he relifted openly, howbeit somewhat (as mendeemed) more faintly, then he that was harrily minded to his wealth: And they that thus judge, thinke that long time in K. Edwardslife, he forcast to be king, in case that his brother (whose life he looked that euill diet should shorten) Rithard of Gigs. thould happen to deceafe (as indeed he did) while his effer intended should happen to accent as much need that for to be King coten children were young. And they deeme that for whiles Kind were this intent he was glad of the Duke of Clarence bued, death , whole life must needes have hindered him to intending, (being his elder brother) whether the same Duke had kept him true to his Nephew the young king, or enterprized to be king himselfe. But of all this point, there is no certainty, and who so diuineth vpon coniectures, may aswell shoote too farre, as too fliort. Howbeit this haue I by credible information learned, that the same night, in which king Edward died, one Misslebroke long ere morning, came in great hafte to the house of one Patter dwelling in Red Croffe ftreet without Greeple-gate in London: and when he with hafty rapping quickly was let in, he shewed vnto Pottier that K. Edward was departed. By my troth man quoth Potier, then will my Mafter the Duke of Gloncefter be king: what cause The Speech of he had fo to thinke , hard it is to fay , whether being Edwards death, toward him knew any fuch thing intended, or otherwife had any inkling thereof, for it was not likely that he spake it of no ground.

(8) But now to return to the course of this History; were it that the Duke of Glocester had of old foreminded this conclusion, & was now thereunto moued, & put in hope by the occasion of the tender age of the yong Princes his Nephewes (as oportunity & likelihood of speed, putteth a man in courage of that he neuer intended) certaine it is, that he contriued The vacle con their destruction, with the vsurpation of the regall dignirie vpon himselse, and forasmuch as he well wift, and holp to maintaine a long continued grudge and hartburning betweene the Queenes kindred, and the Kings blood, either part enuying others authority; he now thought their diuisions should be (as it was indeed) a forward beginning to the pur-(as was mosecy a covarious egiming to the pur-plice of his intern, and aims ground for the founda-tion of all his building, if he might fift, where the precext of recenging old dipleature, but fer anger and ignorance of the one party, to the defired in of the other and then winne to his purpole as many policy. as he could, and those that could not be wonne, might be loft before they were aware; for of one thing was he certaine, that if his intent were percei-ued he should soone haue made peace between both the parties with his owne blood. (9) King Edward in his life, albeit that this diffention betweene his friends somewhat greeued him, vet in his good health he somewhat lefte regarded it, because he thought whatsoener busines should fall betweene them, himfelfe should alwaies be able to rule both the parties. But in his last sicknes, when he perceived his naturall strength so fore infeebled, that he dispaired all recourie; then considering the being the that ne duparted in recourse; since confidenting use possessions youth of his Childern about he nothing left militure. Queene claimed of the Kings former promise, as for divers other great gifts which he received, that they looked for. These were the grudges which the king on his death bed fought to remoue, and they in shew feemed to cancell, as we have faid, though the sparks of these displeasures burst afterward into a dangerous flame, which confumed most of them, as afterward shall appeare. (10) For assoone as the King was departed this King Edward cellife, his sonne Prince Edward drew towards Lonpaireth tewards don from Ludlow in Wales, which Country being farre off from the law, and recourse to instice, was become to be farre out of Order, and growne wilde Robbers , Rouers walking at liberty vncorrected: for which cause this Prince in the lifetime of his father was fent thither , to the end that the authority of his presence should refraine euill disposed perfons, from the boldenes of their former outrages, To the gouernance and ordering of this young Prince at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Anthonie Woo luil Lord Rivers, and brother vnto the Queene, The Queenes kindred only aa right honorable man, as valiant of hand as politick in Counsell; adioined were there vnto him others of the same partie, and in effect enery one as he was neerest of kin vnto the Queene, so was he planted next about the Prince.

(11) That drift of the Queene not vnwisely deuiled, whereby her blood might of youth be rooted in the Princes fauour, the Duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruction, and vpon that ground set the foundation of all his vnhappy building. For whomfocuer he perceived either at variance with them, or bearing himfelfe their fauour, he brake vnto them; some by mouth, some by writing and secret messengers, that it was neither reason, nor in any wise to be suffered, that the young King their Master and kinseman, should be in the hands and Custody of his mothers kindred, fequestred in manner from their Company and attendance, of which every one ought him as faithfull service as they, and many of them farre more honorable part of kin then his mo-The Duke fee-keth to displace the Prince. thers fide : whose blood (quoth he) saving the Kings pleasure was farre vnmeet to bee matched with his which now to be as who fay remoued from the king and the leffe noble to be left about him, is (quoth hee) neither honorable to his Maiestie nor vnto vs. and also to his Grace no suretie, to have the mightiest of his friends from him, and vnto vs no little ieopar-of themselves. Which whether they forer thirsted after their owne weale, or our woe, it were hard I weene to geffe, and if some folkes friendship had not held better place with the King, then any respect of kindred, they might perhaps easily haue intrapped and brought some of vs to confusion ere this; why not as easily as they have done some other alreadie as necre of his roiall blood as we? But our Lord hath wrought his will, and thankes be to his grace, that pe-

With these wordes and writings and such o ther, the Duke of G'enzester soone set aftre them that were of themselves apt enough to kindle sespecially two, Edward Duke of Buckingham, and William Lord Haflings Chamberlaine, both men of honor and of great power. The one by long fuccession from his Aunceftry: the other by his office; and the Kings fauour; These two not bearing each to other so much lone; as both of them hatred vnto the Queenes part, in Theeses bring thither their from goods; and liue thereon rio toully : there they deuise new robberies, nightly they steale out, they rob and riue, killand come in againe, as though those placrs gaue them not onely a safeguard for the harme they have done, but a licence also to do more; howbeit much of this mischiefe, if Wisemen would set their hands to it, might bee amended, with great thankes of God, and no breach of the Priviledge The relidue, fith fo long agoe, I wot neere what Pope, and what Prince more pitteous then politicke hath granted it, and other men fince, of a certaine religious feare, haue not broken it; let vs therefore take paine therewith, and let it a Gods name stand in force, as farre forth as reason will, which is not fully so farre forth, as may serue to let vs of the fetching forth of this Nobleman, to his honour and wealth, out of that place, in which he neither is, nor can bec a Sanctuary man. A Sanctuary scrueth alwayes to defend the body of that man that standerhin danger abroad, not of great hurt onelie, but also of lawfull hurt; for against vnlawfull harmes, neuer Pope nor King intended to priniledge any one place, for that priniledge bath euery place: knoweth any man any place, wherein it is lawful for one man to do another wrong? that no man vnlawfully take hurt, that liberty, the King, the Law, and very nature forbiddeth in enery place, and maketh to that regard, for every man, euery place a Sanctuary : but where a man is by lawfull meanes in perill, there needeth hee the tuition of some special priviledge, which is the onely ground and cause of all Sanctuaries from which neceffity this noble Prince is farre, whose lone to the King, nature and kindred proueth, whose innocency to all the world, his tender youth proueth, and fo Sanctuary, as for him, neither none he neederh nor none can hee haue. Men come nor to Sanctuary, as they come to Baptisme, to require it by their rumor of the people, and their obloquic, but also Godfathers; hee must aske it himselfe, that must to the importable griefe and displeasure of the kings haue it; and reason, firh no man hath cause to haue royall Maicfly, to whose Grace it were a fingular it, but whose conscience of his owne fault maketh him faine need to require it: whanwill then hath yonder babe? which and if he had discretion to require it, if neede were, I dare fay would now bee right angry with them that keepe him there; and I would thinke without any scruple of conscience, without any breach of Priuiledge, to bee somewhat more homelic with them, that be there Sanctuarie men indeed: for if one goe to Sanctuary with another mans goods, why should not the King, leauing his body at liberty, satisfie the party of his goods, euen within the Sanctuarie? for neither King nor Pope can give any place fuch a priniledge, that it shall discharge a man of his debres, being able to pay. And with that divers of the Clergy that were present, whether they said it for his pleasure, or as they thought, agreede plainely, that by the law of God, and of the Church, the goods of a Sanctuarie man, should bee delivered in payment ations; which thing the Lords effeemed not flight, of his debts, and stolne goods to the owner, and though it seemed light; well pondering, that their onely liberty referued him, to get his living with the labour of his hands. Verily (quoth the Duke) youth without recreation and play, cannot endure, nor any stranger, for the conjecture of both their a-I thinke you say very truth; and what if a mans wife ges and citates, fo meete in that point for any of would take Sanctuary, because the lift to runne from them, as eyther of them for other. her husband? I would weene if the could alleadge none other cause, hee may lawfully without any displeasure to Saint Peter, take her out of Saint Peters Church by the arme. And if no body may be taken out of Sanctuary, that faith he will bide there, then if a child will take Sanctuary, because hee feareth to goe to schoole, his Master must let him a. lone. And as simple as the sample is, yet is there leffe reason in our case then in that; for therein, though it be a childish feare; yet is there at the least wife some feare, and herein is there none at all. And verily, I have often heard of Sanctuary men, but

therefore, as for the Conclusion of my mind, who fo may have descrued to need it, if they thinke it conclusion for their suretie, let them keepe it; but he can be no Sanctuary man that had neither wildome to defire it, nor malice to deserue it, whose life or libertie; can by no lawfull processe stand in icopardie : and hee that taketh one out of the Sanctuarie to do him good, I say plainely that he breaketh no San-(28) When the Duke had done, the temporall men wholy, & most part of the spiritual also, thinking no hurt carthly meant towardes the young babe, condifcended in effect, that if hee were not delivered, hee fhould bee fetched; how beit they delivered, hee fhould bee fetched; how beit they all thought it beft, in the auciding of all maner of remember of them all. to get him with her good will. And thereupon, all the Councell came vnto the Starre-Chamber at westminster, and the Lord Cardinall leaving the Protector with the Councellin the Starre-Chamber, departed into the Sanctuary to the Queen with divers other Lords with him, were it for the respect of his honour, or that fhee should by presence of so many, perceine that this crrand was not one mans mind; or were it, for that the Protector intended not in this matter, to trust any one man alone, or elle, that if shee finally were determined to keepe him, some of that Company had happily secret instructions incontinent, maugre her mind to take him, and to leave her no respite to convey him, which shee was likely to mind, after this matter broken to her, if the time would in any wife ferue (29) When the Queene and those Lords were come together in presence, the Lord Cardinall comfort, to have his naturall brother in Company, as it was both his dishonour, all theirs, and hers also, to suffer him in Sanctuary, as though the one brother flood in danger and perill of the other. And hee shewed her, that the Counsell therefore had fent him to require her the delinery of the yong Duke, that hee might bee brought vnto the Kings presence at his liberty, out of that place, which they reckoned as a prison, and there hee should bee demeaned, according to his effate: and flee in this doing should both dor great good to the Realme, pleasure to the Councell and profite to her selfe luccour to her friends that were in distresse; and befides that (which he wift well fhee specially tendred) not onely great comfort and honour to the King but also to the young Duke himselfe, whose great wealth it were to be together, aswell for many greater causes, as also for both their disports and recre-

(31) No man denieth good Madam (quoth the Cardinall) but that your Grace were of all others most necessary about your children, and so would all the Councell not onely bee content, but glad that you were, if it might fland with your pleafure, to bee in such place as might stand with their honor: but if you doe appoint your felfe to tarry here, then they thinke it were more convenient that the Duke of Yorke were with the King, honourably at his liberty, to the comfort of them both, rather then here as a Sanctuary man, to both their dishonour and obloquie, fith there is not alwayes fo great a necessity to haue the child with his mother, but that occasion may sometimes bee such, that it fhould bee more expedient to keepe him elsewhere, which well appeareth in this, that at fuch time as your dearest sonne then Prince; and now King, should for his honor, and good order of the Country, keepe his residence in Wales, farre out of your Company, your Grace was well contented therwith your felfe.

(32) Not very well contented (quoth the Queen) and yet the case is not like, for the one was then in health, and the other is now ficke: in which cafe I maruaile greatly, that my Lord Protector is fo desirous to have him in his keeping, where if the Child in his sicknesse miscarrie by nature, yet might hee runne into flander and fuspition of fraud. And where they call it a thing fo fore against my Childes honour, and theirs also, that hee abideth in this place: it is all their honours there to suffer him abide, where no man doubteth hee shall be best kept, and that is here, while I am here, which as yet intendnor to come forth, andieopard my felfe after other of my friends, which would God were rather here in furety with mee, then I there in icopardy

(33) Why Madame(quoth another Lord) know you any thing why they should bee in icopardy? Nay verily (quoth shee) nor why they should bee in prifon , as now they bee. But it is I trow no great maruaile though I feare, left those that have not letted to put them in durance without colour, will let as little to procure their destruction without cause: The Cardinall made a countenance to the other Lord, that hee should harpe no more vpon that ftring, and then faid hee to the Queen, that he nothing doubted, but that those Lords of her honourable kinne, which as yet remained vader arrest, should upon the matter examined doe well inough, and as towards her noble person, neither was, neither could be any icopardy.

(34) Whereby should I trust that (quoth the Queene?) in that I am guildesse? as though they were guilty: in that I am with their enemies better loued then they? when they hate them for my fake; in that I am so neerca kin to the King? and how farre they be off if that would helpe, as God grant it hurt not, and therefore as for me, I purpose not as yet, to depart hence. And as for this gentleman my sonne, I minde that he shall be where I am till I fee further: for I affure you, for that I see some men so greedy, without any substantiall cause to have him, makes me much more fearefuli to deliuer him. Truly Madame (quoth he) the more vnwilling that you be to deliuer him, the more vnwilling other men be to fuffer you to keepe him, least your cause lesse feare might cause you farther to convey him: and many there be that thinke he can haue no priniledge in this place, which neither can have will to aske it, nor malice to deferue it, and therefore they reckon no priviledge broken though they fetch him out, which if you finally refule to deliver him, I verily think they will: fo much dreadhath my Lord his vncle, for the tender love he beareth nim, left your grace should hope to send him away.

THE SVCCESSION OF

(35) Ah fir (quoth the Queene) hath the Protector so tender zeale that he feareth nothing, but least he should escape him? thinketh he that I would send him hence, which is not in plight to fend out, and in what place could I account him fure, if he be not fure in the Sanctuary? which there was never Tyrant yet so divelish, that durst presume to breake And I trust God is as strong now to withstand his aduerfaries, as euer he was. But my fonne can deferue no Sanctuary, and therefore he cannot have it. Forfooth he hath found out a goodly gloffe, by which that place that may defend a thiefe, may not saue an innocêt: but he is in no ieopardy, nor bath no need thereof: would God he had not. Thinketh the Protector, (I pray God hee may proue a Protector) thinketh hee, that I perceive not whereunto his painted Processe draweth ? It is not honorable that the Duke abide here : It were comfortable for them both, that he were with his brother, because the King lacketh a play fellow forsooth. I pray God fend them both better playfellows then him, that maketh sohigh a matter, vpo so trifling pretext, as though there could none be found to play with the King, but his brother, (that hath no lift to play for ficknes) come out of Sanctuary, out of his fafe gard to play with him. As though Princes, as yong as they be, could not play but with their Peeres, of as they be, could not play but with their kindred, with whom for the most part they agree much worse then with strangers. But the Childe cannot require the priniledge: who tolde him so? he shall heare him aske it, if he will. Howbeir, this is a gay matter, fuppose hee coulde not aske it, suppose hee woulde not aske it, suppose hee woulde aske to goe out, if I say hee shall not if I aske the priviledge but for my felfe, I fay he that taketh him out against my will , breaketh the Sanctuarie. Serueth this liberty for my person onely, or for my goods alfo? you may not take hence my horfe from me : and may you take my child from me ? He aifo is my ward: for as my learned Councell showeth me, fith he hath nothing by discent holden by Knights scruice, the law maketh his mother his Gardian. Then may no man I suppose, take my ward from me out of Sanctuary, without the breach of Sanctuary. And if my priniledge could not ferue him, nor he aske it for himselfe, yet sith the law committeeth to me the custodie of him, I may require it for him, except the law giue achild a Gardian only for his goods and lands, discharging him of the cure and safe-keeping of his body, for which only both lands and goods serue. And if examples be sufficient, to obtaine priuiledge for my child, I need not farre to feeke them, for in this place in which now we be (and which is now in question, whether my child may take benefit of it)mine other fonne now King, was borne, kept in his Cradle, and preserved to a more prosperous fortune, which I pray God long to continue. And as you all know, this is not the first time that I have taken Sanctuary. For when my Lord my husband was banished, and thrust out of his Kingdome, I fled hither, being great with Child : and here I bare the Prince: and when my Lord my husband returned fafe againe, and had the victory, then went I hence, to welcome him home, and from hence I brought my babe the Prince vnto his father, when hee first tooke him in his armes. And I pray God that my fonnes Pallace may be as great a safegard vnto him now raigning, as this place was sometime to the Kings enemie. In which place I intend to keepe his brother, fince mans law ferueth the Gardian to keepe the Infant. The law of nature wils the mother to keepe Chap.18. | Edward V. ENGLANDS MONARCHS. Monarch 55.

her child, Gods law priviled geth the Sanctuary, and the Sanctuary my fonne, fith I feare to put him in the Protectors hands, who hath his brother already, and were (if both failed)inheritour to the Crowne: and the cause of my scare, hath no man to doe to examine But yet I feare no further then the law feareth, which as learned men tell me, forbiddeth euerie man, the custody of them by whose death hee may inherit lesse land then a Kingdome. I can no more but who foeuer he be that breaketh this holy Sanctuary, I pray God shortly send him need of a Sanctuary when hee may not come to it, for taken out of Sanctuary I would not that my mortall enemy were.

(36) The Lord Cardinall perceiving that the Queene waxed euer the longer the further off, & also that shee beganne to kindle and chase, and speake more biting words against the Protector, and such as he neuer beleeued, and was also loath to heare, hee faid to her for a finall conclusion, that he no longer would dipute the matter, but if thee were content to deliver the Duke to him, and to the other Lords present, he durst lay his body and soule both in pledge, not onely for his furery, but also for his estate; And if she would give a resolute answere to the contrary, he would forthwith depart therewithall, and fhift who so would with this businesse afterward, for he neuer intended more to moue her in that matter, in which thee thought that hee and all others also faue herselfe, lacked either witte or truth; wit, if they were fo dull that they could perceiue nothing what the Protector intended : truth, if they should procure her sonne to be delivered into his hands, in whom they should perceive to wards the Child any euill intended. (37) The Queene with these wordes stood a good while in a deepe study. And for as much as her feemed the Cardinal ready to depart, and the Protector himselfe readie at hand, so as shee verily thought the could not keepe him there, but that he should incontinent be taken thence, and to convey him elfewhere, neither had sheetime to serue her, nor place determined, nor persons appointed, all things vnrea dy, this melfage came on her fo fuddainly, nothing leffe looked for, then to have him fetcht out of San tuarie, which she thought to be now befer in such places about, that he could not be conneyed out vntaken, and partly (as flice thought) it might fortune her feare to be falle, so well shee wishit was either needlesse or bootlesse: Wherefore, if shee must needs go fro him, the deemed it best to deliver him, & besides the Cardinals faith, she nothing doubted, neither some other Lords, whom she saw there prefent, which as the feared left they might be deceived. fo was the wel affured they would not be corrupted: and thought it would make the the more warily to looke to him, and the more circum(pectly to fee to his furety, if with her owne hands shee betooke him to them of trust. And lastly taking the young Duke by the hand faid vnto the Lords.

(28) My Lords, and all my Lords; I neither am fo vnwife to mistrust your wits, nor so suspitious to mistrust your truths; of which thing I purpose to make you such a proofe, as if either of both lacked in you, might both turne mee to great forrow, the Realme to much harme, & you all to great reproch. For loe, here is (quoth fae) this Gentleman, whom I doubt not, but I could heere keepe safe if I would, whatfoeuer any man fay : and I doubt not alfo, but there bee some abroad so deadly enemies vnro my blood, that if they wift where any of it lay in their owne bodies, they would let it out. We have also experience, that the defire of a kingdome knoweth no kindred: the brother bath beene the brothers bane: and may the Nephewes be fure of their Vncle ? Each of these children is the others defence, whileft they are afunder, and each of their lives lieth in the others body: keepe one fafe and both be fure, and nothing for them both more perillous then to be in one place. For what wife Merchant aduentureth all his goods in one ship ? All this notwithstan-ding, I deliuer him, and his brother in him, to keep, into your hands, of whom I shall aske both, before God and the world. Faithfull ye be, that wor I well; and I know well you be wife, power and strength to Torre delucred keepe him, if yee list, neither lack yee of your selfe, to the Cardinal, nor lack helpe in this case. And if you cannot elsewhere, then may you leave him heere: but onely one thing, I befeech you, for the truft that his father ever put in you, and for the trust I now put you in, that as fatre as you thinke I feare too much, bee you well wary that you feare not too little: and therewithall thee fayd vnto the child, Farewell mine owne fweet son, God send you good keeping: let me kisse you yet once, ere you go; for God knoweth when wee shall kiffe together againe. And therwithal she kiffed him, and blessed him, turned her back and wept, and went her way leaving the child weeping as faste. When the Lord Cardinal, and those other Lords with him, had received the yong Duke, they brought him into the Star-chamber, where the protector tooke him in his armes, and kiffed him with these words : None welcome my Lord, even with all my beart : In which faving, it is like hee spake as he thought. Thereupon foorthwith they brought him vnto the King his brother, into the Bithops Pallace at Paules; and from thence both of them through the Citie of London honourably attended into the Tower, out of which after that day they never came againe, (39) The protector having both the children now in his hands, opened himfelf more boldly, both to certaine other men, & also chiefly to the Duke of death. But others againe, which knew better the fubtill wit of the protector, deny that he ever opened his enterprise to the Duke, vntil he had brought to paffe the things before rehearfed. But when hee had imprisoned the Queenes kindred, and gotten that would have done it and this he required them (48) Euerie man answered him faire, as though no man midrufted the matter, which oftruth no man beleeved; yet for the further appealing of the peoples minde, he sent immediately after dinner, in all hafte, an Herauld of Armes, with a Proclamation to be made through the City in the Kings name, conteining that the Lord Hallings with divers others of his traiterous purpose, had before conspired the same day, to have slaine the Lord Protector, and Duke of Buckingham, fitting in the Councell, and after to have taken vpon them, to rule the King and the Realme, at their owne pleafures; thereby to pill and spoile, whom they lifted vncontrolled. And much matter there was in that Proclamation, deuifed to the flander of the Lord Chamberlaine, as that he was an euill Counseller to the Kings father, entiling him to many things, highly redounding to his great dishonour, and to the vniuerfall hurt of his Realme, by his euill company, finister procuring, & ungratious example aswell in many other things, as in the vicious liuing, and inordinate abulion of his body, both with many others, and especially with Shores wife, who was one also of his most secret Counsell, in this hainous treason, with whom hee lay nightly, and namely, the night last past, before his death, so that it was the lesse maruell, if vngracious living brought him to an vnhappy ending which he was now put vnto, by the most dread commandement of the Kings highnesse, and of his ho-norable and faithfull Counsell, both for his demerits, being so openly taken in his fallely conceined treason, as also least the delaying of his execution, might have encouraged other mischieuous persons partners of his conspiracy, to gather and assemble themselves together in making some great commotion for his deliuerance, whose hope being now by and peace (49) Now was this Proclamation made within two houres, after that he was beheaded, and was fo curiously indited, and so faire written in parchment, his wel-deferred death politickely repressed, all the Realme should by Gods grace, rest in good quiet in so well a fet hand, and therewith of it selfe so long a processe, as every child might perceive, that it was prepared before. For all the time between his death, and the proclaiming, could scant have suffiled vnto the bare writing alone; had it beene but in paper, and scribled forth in hast at aduenture. So that vpon the proclaiming thereof, one that was Schoole-mafier of Paules, of chance standing by, and comparing the (hortnes of the time, with the length of the matter, faid vnto them that ftood about him ; Hereis a The Schooles gay goodly east, foule cast away for hast : and a Merchant makers opinion answered him, that it was written by Prophecie. Now then by and by, as it were for anger, not for couetousnesse, the Protector sent the Sheriffes of London, into the house of Shores wife (for her husband dwelled not with her) and spoiled her of all London carrie that shee had, aboue the value of three thousand Shores wife to markes, carrying her through London vnto the Tow- prifor. er, and there left her Prisoner, where (for fashion sake) he laid to her charge, that thee went about to bewitch him, and that shee was of Counsell with the Lord Chamberiaine to destroy him : in conclusion, when no colour could fasten vpon these matters, then laid hee hainoully vnto her charge, the thing that her felfe could not deny, that all the world wift was true, and that neithleffe euery man laughed at, to heare it then so suddainly, so highly taken, that thee was nought of her body. And for that cause (as a good continent Prince, cleare and faultlesse himselfe, sent out of heaven into this vitious world for the amendment of mens manners) after thee had laine Prisoner in Ludgate, hecaused the Bishop of London to put her to open penance, going before the Crosse in procession vpon a funday, with a taper in her band. In which shee went in countenance and pace demure so womanly, and albeit shee were out of all array faue her kirtle only, yet went shee so faire and louely, namely while the wondering of the people caft a comly rud in her cheekes (of which before thee had most mist) that her great shame, wan her and paie Shore much praise, among those that were more amorous wife, of her body, then curious of her foule. And many good folke also that hated her living, and glad to see finne fo corrected, yet pitied the more her penance, then rejoiced therein, when they confidered that the Protector procured it more of a corrupt intent, then any vertuous affection.

well married, fauing somewhat too soone; her hufband an honest Citizen, young, and goodly, and of good fubstance. But for almuch as they were coupled ere shee were well ripe, shee not very feruently oned, for whom shee never longed; which was hapy the thing that the more made her incline vnro the Kings appetite, when he required her. Howbeit the respect of his roialty, the hope of gay appa rell, ease, pleasure, and other wanton wealth, was able soone to pierce a soft tender heart. But when the King had abused her, anone her husband (as he was an honest man, and one that could his good, not prefaming to touch a Kings concubine) left her vp to him altogether. When the King died, the Lord Chamberlaine tooke her, which in the Kings daies, albeit he was fore enamoured vpon her, yet he forbare her, either for reuerence, or for a certaine friendly faithfulnes; proper shee was, and faire; nothing in her body that you could have changed, vnleffe you would have wished her somewhat higher. Thus they fay that knew her in her youth. But to my feeming, the chance is so much the more worthy to be remembred, in how much the is now in the more beggerly condition vnfriended, and worne out of acquaintance, after good substance, after so great fanour with a Prince, after so great suit, and seeking to, of all those, that in those dayes had businesse to speede, as many other men were in their times, which bee now famous onely by the infamy of their ill deedes: her doings were not much leffe, albeit they bee much leffe remembred, because they were not so euill: for men vsc, if they receive an euill turne, to write it in marble: and who so doth vs a good turne, we write it in the duft; which is not worst proued by her: for at this day shee beggeth of many, at this day lining, that at this day had begged if shee had not been. (51) Now it was so denised by the Protector and his Councell, that the felfe fame day in which the L.

Chamberlaine was beheaded in the Tower of London, and about the selfe same howre was then (not without his affent) beheaded at Pomfrait, the foreremembred Lords and Knights, that were taken from the King at Northampton and Stony-Stratford; which thing was done in the presence, and by the order of Sir Richard Ratcliffe Knight, whose service the Protector specially yied in that counsell, and in the execution of fuch lawleffe enterprises, as a man that had beene long fecret with him, having experience of the world, and a shrewd witte, short and rude in speech, rough and boisterous of behaviour, bolde in milchiefe, as farre from pitty, as from all feare of God. This Knight bringing them out of prison to the Scaffold, and shewing to the people present, that they were Traitors, not fuffering them to speake, or declare their innocency, left their wordes might have inclined men to pirty them, and to hate the Protector and his part; caused them hashily without Iudgement, processe or manner of order to bee beheaded, and without all guilt, but onely that they were good men, too true to the King, and too nigh to the Queene,

(52) Now when the Lord Chamberlaine, and those other Lords and Knights were thus beheaded and ridde out of the way: then thought the Protector, that while men muled what the matter meant. while the Lords of the Realmewere about him out of their owne strengthes, while no man wist what to thinke, nor whom to trust, before they should have space to dispute, and digest the matter, and make parties, it were best hastily to pursue his purpole, and put himselfe in possession of the Crown. ere men could have time to deuise how to refist. But now was all the fludy, by what meanes the matter being of it selfe so hainous, might be first broken to the people in such wife as it might bee well taken; To this counsell they tooke divers, such as they thought meet to bee trufted, likely to bee induced to that part, and able to fland them in flead, eyther by power or policy: Among whom they made of counfell Edmend Shaa Knight, then Maior of Lon- The Milorof don, who vpon trust of his owne advancement, wher-of he was of a proud heart, highly desirous, should from the City to the heart, and the front from the City to the first own felt. frame the City to their appetite. Of Spiritual men they tooke such as had wir, and were in authoritie among the people, for opinion of their learning and had no scrupulous conscience. Among these had they John Shaa Clerke brother to the Major. and Fryer Pinker Provinciall of the Augustine Friers, both of them Doctors in Divinity, both great Preachers, both of more learning then vertee, and of more fame, then learnings for they were before greaters. ly effeetned of the common people; but after that neuer. thinke, that Pinker was not of counfell in the matter before the Coronation, but after the common manner, fell to flattery after: namely, fith his fer-mon was not incontinent vpon it, but at S. Maries Hospitall in the Easter weeke following. But cerraine it is, that Doctor Shee was of counsell in the beginning, so farre forth as they determined that he should first breake the matter in a Sermon at Paules Croffe, in which hee should by the authority of his preaching, incline the people to the Protectors ghostly purpose. But now was all the labour and study, in the deuise of some convenient pretext :

thing and the weightieft of all, the invention refted in this, that they should alleadge bastardy, either in

X. Edward himfelf or in his children, or both. So that hee should seeme disabled to inherite the Crowne, by the Duke of Yorke, and the Prince by him. To lay bastardie in King Edward, sounded openly to the rebake of the Protectors owne mother, who was ther point, concerning the bastardie that they dehee should bee openly declared, and enforced to the vetermost. The colour and pretext whereof, was a contract pretended to bee made by King Edward vnto the Lady Lucy, whereof we have spoken in the raigne of the faid King : which invention how fimple socuer, yet it liked them, to whom it suffi-

(60) When the Duke had this leave and pardon to speake, then waxed hee bold to shew him their entent and purpole, with all the causes mouing them thereunto, as you have heard before: and finally, to befeech his Grace, that it would like him of his accustomed goodnes and zeale vnto the realm now with his eye of pitty, to behold the long continued diftreffe, and decay of the same, and to set his gratious hands to redresse an amendment there The Protector of, by taking vpon him the Crowne and gouernincreased to ac ment of the land; according to his right and title lawfully descended vnto him, and to the law of God, profit of the Realme, and vnto his grace fo much the more honour, and leffe paine, in that, that neuer Prince raigned ouer any people that were so glad to line vnder his obeisance, as the people of this land vn-(61) When the Protector had heard the proposition, he looked very strangely thereat, and answered: That albeit it were, he partly knew the things by them alleaged to be true, yet such intire loue he bare vnto King Edward and his children, that so much more he regarded his honour in other Realmes about, then the Crowne of any one, of which he was neuer defirous, that he could not finde in his heart in this point to incline to their defire. For in all other Nations wherethe truth was not wellknowne, it would peraduenture be thought, that it was his own ambitious minde and deuise, to depose the Prince, The Protector and to take himselfe the Crowne, with which infamie he would not haue his honour stained for anie Crowne, in which he had euer perceiued much more labour and paine, then pleasure to him that would so vie it, as he that would not, were not worthy to haue it. Notwithstanding he not only pardoned them the motion that they made him, but alfo thanked them for the love and harry favour they bare him, praying them for his fake to give and beare the same to the Prince, under whom hee was, and would be content to live, and with his labour and counsell, as farre as should like the King to vie him, he would doe his vttermost endenour to set the Realme in good state, which was already in this little time of his Protectorship (the praise be giuen to God) well begun, in that the malice of such as were before, occasion of the contrary, and of new intended to be, were now partly by good pollicy, partly more by Gods speciall prouidence, then mans prouifion repressed, (62) Vpon this answere given, the Duke by the Protectors licence, a little rowned, aswell with other noble men about him, as with the Maior and Recorder of London. And after that, vpon like pardon defired and obtained, he shewed aloude vnto the Protector for a finall conclusion, that the Realme was at a point, King Edwards line should not any longer raigne ouer them, both for that they had so farre gone, as it was now no furcty to retreat, as for that they thought it was for the weale vniuerfall to take that way, although they had not yet begun it. Wherefore if it would like his grace to take the Crowne vpon him, they would humbly befeech him thereunto; if he would give them a refolute anfwere to the contrary, which they would be loth to heare, then must they needes seeke, and would not faile to finde some other noble man that would.

Chap. 18. | Edward V. ENGLANDS MONARCHS. Monarch 55| These words much moued the Protector, which else as euery man may know, would neuer of likelihood have inclined thereunto But when he law there was none other way, but that either he must take it, or elfe he, and his both goe from it, he faid vnto the Lords and commons, (63) Sith weewell perceive that all the Realme is fo fet, whereof we be very forry, that they will not fundamentally active the fundamental than the copied the copied the copied to the them, whom no earthly man can gouerne against Crowne. their wils, and well we also perceine, that no man there is to whom the Crowne can by just title appertaine, as to our felfe, as very right heire lawfully begotten of the body of our most deare father Richard late Duke of Yorke, to which title is now joined your election, the Nobles and Commons of this Realme, which we of all title possible take for the most effectuall: we be content, and agree fauourably to incline to your petition and request, and according to the same, we here take vpon vs the roiall estate, preheminence, and kingdome of the two noble realmes, England and France, the one from this day forward, by vs and our heires, to rule, gouerne, and defend; the other by Gods grace, and your good helpe, to ger againe and subdue, and establish for euer in due obedience vnto this Realm of England, the advancement whereof we neueraske of God longer to live, then we intend to procure. With this there was a great shout, crying King Richard, King Richard. And then the Lords went up to the King (for fo was he from that time called) and the people departed, talking dinerfely of the matter, every man as his fantaliegaue him. (64) Much was talked, and maruelled at the manner of this dealing, that the matter was made so firange vnto both parties, as though they neuer Diuen opinion had communed either with others before, when as themselves wift there was no man so dull that heard them, but perceived well inough, that all the matter was fo made betweene them. Howbeit, some excused that againe, and said all must be done in good order : And men must sometimes for manners fake, not be acknown what they know for at the confecration of a Bishop, euery man wotteth well, by the paying for his bulles, that he purposeth to be one, and though he pay for nothing elfe, and yet must he twice be asked, whether he will be a Bishop or no, and hee must twice say nay, and at the third time take it, as compelled thereunto by his owne will. And in a Stage-play the people know right well, that he who plaieth the Sowdaine, is percase a fowter, yet if one should know so little good, to shew out of season what acquaintance he hath with him, and call him by his owne name, while he flandeth in his maielty, one of his tormentors might hap to breake his head worthily for marring of the plaie.

Please it your noble Grace to vnderstand the confi-

To the high and Mighty Prince derations, election and petition underwritten of vs, the Lords Spirituall & temporall, and Commons of this Realme of England, and thereunto agreably to give your affent to the common and publike Protedor. weale of this land, to the comfort and gladnesse of all the people of the fame. First, we consider how that heretofore in some pailed, this land many yeers flood in great prosperity, honour, and tranquilitie, which was cauled, forformuch as the King then raigning, vied and followed the adulte and countries certaine Lords spirituall and temporall, and other on soule pretention policy. & ning, vied and followed the adulfe and counfell of persons of approued sadnesse, prudence, policy,& experience, dreading God, and hauing tender zeale and affection to indifferent ministration of inflice, and to the common and publike weale of the land Then our Lord God was dread, loued and honoured, then within the land was peace and tranquitity, and among neighbours concord and charity, then the malice of outward enemies was mightilie relifted and repressed, and the land honourably defended with many great and glorious victories, then the entercourse of Merchants was largely vfed and exercised: by which thinges aboue femenbred, the land was greatly enriched, so that aswell the Merchants and Artificers, as other poore people labouring for their liuings in diuers occupations, had competent gaine to the fustentation of them & their housholds, lining without miterable and intollerable pouerty: but afterward, when that fuch as had the rule and governance of this land, delighting in adulation and flattery, and led by sensuality and concupifcence, followed the counfell of persons infolent, vicious, and of inordinate auarice, despising the counsell of good, vertuous, & prudent persons, fuch as about bee remembred; The profestity of this land dayly decreafed, so that felicity was turned into milery, and prosperity into aduersity, and the order of policy, and of the law of God and Man confounded, whereby it is likely this Realme to fall into extreme misery and desolation (which God defend) without due prouision of couenable remedy bee had in this behalfe, in all goodly haft,

(3) Ouer this, among other things more speciali wee confider, how that the time of the raigne of K. Edward the fourth late deceased, after the vngracious pretented marriage (as all England hath cause fo to fay) made betwixt the faid King Edward, and Elezabeth fometimes wife to Sir John Gray knight, late naming her selfe, and many yeeres heretofore Queene of England, the order of all politicke rule was peruerted, the lawes of God, and of Gods Church, and also the lawes of nature, and of England, and also of the laudable customes and liberties of the same, wherein enery English man is inheritor, broken, subuerted and contemned, against all reafon and iustice, so that the land was ruled by selfewill and pleasure, feare and dread, all manner of equity and law laide apart and despited, whereof enfued many inconveniences and mischiefes, as murthers, extortions, and oppressions, namely of poore and impotent people, so that no man sure of his life, land or livelyhood, ne of his wife, daughter nor fernant, euery good maiden and woman standing in dread to bee rauished and defloured: and besides this, what discords, inward battels, effusion of Christian mens bloud, and namely, by the destruction of the Nobles bloud of this land, was had and committed within the same, it is enident and notarie through all this Realme, vnto the great forrow and heavinesse of all true Englishmen. And here also wee consider, how that the said pretended trarriage betwixt the aboue named King Edward and E. lizabeth Gray was made of great prefumption with-out the knowing & affent of the Lords of this land. and also by forcery and witchcraft committed by the faid Elizabeth and her mother Jaquet Dutchesse of Bedjord, as the common opinion of the people, and the publike voice and fame is through all this land: and hereafter if the cause shall require, shall be pro-Qqqqq wards the temperalty, & the other Inflice to the Clergy; the Duke of Suffolke then followed with the Scepter, which fignified Peace: the Earle of Lincolne bare the Ball and Croffe which fignified a Monarchy: Then came the Earle of Surrey bearing the fourth (word theathed in a rich scaberd, and is called the sword of Estate, next whom followed Gartar King at Armes, vpon whole right hand went the Gentleman Viher of the Kings priuy Chamber, and on his left the Lord Major of London, with a Mace in his hand; Next vnto whom went the Duke of Norfolke bearing the Kings Crowne betwixt his hands, and then King Rechard himselfe came, in a Surcote and Robe of purple veluct; having over his head a Canapie borne by the foure Barons of the fine Ports, the Bilhop of Bath on his right hand, and of Durham on his left. The Duke of Buckingham bare the Kings traine, and to fignifie the office of high Steward of England, he bare a White Staffe in his hand.

(13) Then followed the Queenes traine: before The order of the whom was borne the Scepter, the Juorie Rod with the Queenes pro-Done, and the Crowne, her felfe apparelled in Robes like the Kings under a rich Canapie, at cuery corner thereof a bell of gold. On her head shee ware a circlet let full of precious stones, the Countesse of Richmond bearing her traine; the Dutchesse of Norfolke and Suffolk in their Coronets attendants, with twenty Ladies of estate most richly attired. In this order they passed the Pallace into the Abbey, and ascending to the high Altar there shifted their Robes, and having other R obes open in diners places from the middle vpward, were both of them annointed and Crowned, he with Saint Edwards Crowne, hauing the Scepter deliuered into his left hand, and the Ball with the Crosse a token of Monarchie in his right, the Queene had a Scepter given into her right hand, and the Ittory Done in her left; then after the Sacrament received (having the hoft devided betwixt them) they both offered at Saint Edwards shrine, where the King left his Crowne and pur on hisowne; and thus done, in the same Order and State as they came, returned to Westminster hall, and there held a most Princely feast. Whereof let Hall and Grafton tell you for me.

(14) But this his faire Sunne was soone ouercast with many darke Cloudes and mischiefes, which sir Thomas fell thicke upon the necke of each other, for as the Moore thing euill gotten, is neuer well kept:through all the time of his raigne there never cealed death and Thetime of King flaughter, till his owne destruction ended it. Yet as full of calamihe finished his daies with the best death , and the ties. most righteous, that is to say, his owne: so began he with the most piteous and wicked, I meane the lamentable murther of his innocent Nephewes, the young King and his tender brother; whose deaths and finall misfortunes have nevertheleffe come fo farre in question, that some remaine yet in doubt, whether they were in his daies destroiced or no. Not for that only, that Perkin W arbecke by the malice of many, and the folly of more, fo long a time abuling Doubts made the world, was aswel with Princes, as the other poore people, reputed and taken for the younger of these two: but for that also as all things were in late daies so couertly demeaned, one thing pretended and another done, that there was nothing so plaine and openly proued, but for the common custome and close couert dealing, men had it euer inwardly in suspect, as many well counterfeit Iewels make the true mistrusted. Howbeit concerning the opinion with the occasions moning either party, we shall haue place more at large hereafter to intreat of: in the meane time for this present matter shall be rehearfed the dolorous end of these young Babes, not after euerie report 1 haue heard, but by such men, and by fuch meanes, as to my feeming it were hard butit thould betrue faith Sir Thomas Moore.

(15) K. After which time the Prince neuer tied his points, nor cared for himfelfe, but with that young Babe his brother lingered with thought and heauines, till their traiterous deaths delinered them our of that wretchednesse: for the execution whereof, Tirrell appointed Miles Farrest, one of the foure deepe in the ground, under a great heape of flones. Then rode Sir Iames in haste to the King, vnto whom he shewed the maner of their death, and place of buriall, which newes was so welcome to his wicked heart, as he greatly reioiced, and with great thankes dubbed (as some hold) this his merciles Instrument, knight. But the place of their buriall hee liked not, faying, that vilecorner should not containe the bodies of those Princes, his Nephewes, & commanded them a better place for burial because they were the fons of a King. Whereupo. the Priefs of the Tower tookevp the bodies; and scretly interred them in Wheresoeuer they were buried, thus they died, and by these murtherers. For very certaine it is, and wel knowne, that at fuch time as Sir Iames Tirrell was in the Tower, for Treason committed against King Henrie the seventh, both Dighton and hee were examined, and confessed the murther in manner as is faid, but whether their bodies were removed they could not fay. King Richard himfelfe as ye fhall hereafter heare, was flaine in the field, Revenge of mur hacked and hewed of his enemies hands, carried on horsebacke dead, his haire in despite torne and tuggedlike a Curre dogge : and the mischiese that he tooke was within leffe then three yeeres of the mifchiefe that he did, and yet all the meane time spent in much paine and rouble outward, and much feare, anguish, and forrow within. For I have heard by The guilty con-frience of King Tichard credible report of fuch as were fecret with his Chamberlaine, that after this abhominable deed done, he neuer had quiet in his minde : he neuer thought himselfe sure ; but where he went abroad his eies euer-whirled about, his body priuily fenced, his hand euer on his dagger his countenance & manner like one alwaies readie to strike againe, he tooke il reft a nights, lay long waking and musing, fore wearied with care and watch, rather flumbred then flept, troubled with fearefull dreames, fuddainly sometimes frart vp, leapt out of his Bed, and ranne about the chamber. fo was his restlesse heart continually toffed and tumbled with the tedious impression and flormy remembrance of his abhominable deed. Neither had he in his best, any time of quiet, for Outward enes mies arite against King Richard. immediately began the conspiracy (or rather good confideration) betweene the Duke of Buckingham, and divers other Gentlemen against him. The forward of (21) Which Duke affoone as Gloucefter woon the fection of the Duke of Buckin-gham towards the Duke of Glodeath of King Edward came to Torke, fent thither in fecret wife a trufty feruant of his, named Perfall, to affure him, that he would take his part in this his new world, and if need were, would waite vpon him with a thousand good-fellowes: and againe sent offers of the like vnto Nottingham, whither the Protector from Yorke, with many Gentlemen of the North Countrey was come, and on his way to Londonward in fecret manner met him himfelfe, but at Northampton openly with three hundred horse; and from thence still continued with him, being a parener of all his deuises, till that after his coronation they de-The Duke of Buck nobles fals in diff he of king parted(as it feemed) very great friends at Glocefter: fro whence as soone as the Duke came home, he so lightly turned from him, and so highly conspired against him, that a man would maruell whereof the change grew. And furely the occasion of their variance is of divers men, diverfely reported; Some have faid, that the Duke a little before the Coronation, a mong other things, required of the Protector, the Duke of Hertfords Lands, to the which he pretended himselfe iust inheritor. And forasmuch as the Ti-The occasions the Kings and tle which he claimed by inheritance, was formewhat interlaced with the title of the Crowne, by the line of King Henry before deprined, the Protector conceiued fuch indignation, that he rejected the Dukes request, with many spightfull and minatory wordes, which so wounded his heart with hatred and mifirust, that he neuer after could indure to looke aright on King Richard, but ever feared his owne life, fo farre forth, that when the Protector rode through London towards his Coronation, he fained himselfe Ruckingbam fai-ned hunfelte fick ficke, because he would not ride with him : And not to attend K. the other taking it in cuill part, fent him word to rife, and comeride, or he would make him to be carried. Whereupon hee rode on with an euill will, and that not withstanding on the morrow rose from the Feast, faining himselfe sick, whereat King Richard faid it was done in hatred and despite of him. And they fay that euer after continually each of them liued in such harred and diffrust of other, as the Duke verily looked to have beene murdered at Gloucester: from which neuertheleffe he in faire manner departed. But furely fome right fecret at this day denie Duke of Eurly a. this: and many right wife men thinke it vnlikely Shame (the deepe diffembling nature of both those men confidered, and what need in that greene world the Protector had of the Duke, and in what perill the Duke flood, if he fell once in suspition of the Tyrant)that either the Protector would give the Duke occasion of displeasure, or the Duke the Protector No such fusiti. occasion of ampliants of the Dank en Frotterin Cocasion of mistrust. And verily menthinke, that if King Richard had any such conceiued opinion, he would neuer haue suffered the Duke to haue clear to be well as a was faid to be. ped his hands. (22) The very truth is, Buckingham was an high minded man, and could cuill beare the glory of another; so that I have heard of some that saw it, that opinion of Euc. the Duke at such time as the Crowne was first jet vp. on the Protectors head, his eye could not abide the fight thereof, but wried his face another way. But men fay, that hee was of truth not well at eafe which | The divers opito King Richard was well knowne, and nothing ill nions of the to King Rienara was well knowne, and nothing ill king and Duke taken, nor any demand of the Dukes vincourteoutly falling out, rejected, but he both with great gifts and high behefts in most louing and trustie manner, departed at Gloucester. But soone after his comming home to Brecknock having there in custody by the commandement of King Richard, Doctor Morton Bishop of Ely, who (yee before heard) was taken in the counfell at the Tower, waxed with him familiar: whose wisedome abused his pride to his owne deliuerance, and the Dukes destruction. (23) This Bishop was a man of great naturall wit; very well learned, and honourable in behaulour, lacking no wife waies to winne fauour : he had been The flory of fast vpon the part of King Henry, while that part was Bishop Meria in wealth; and naytheleffe left it not, nor forfooke it in woe, but fled the Realme with the Queen & the Prince, while King Edward had Henry in prison, and neuer came home but to the field. After which loft and that fide veterly subdued, the other for his fast faith and wiledome not only was content to receive | Martin wood him, but also wood him to come, and had him from who king Edthence forth both in great fecret truft, and very fpeciall fauour, which he nothing deceived. For he being (as you have heard) after King Edwards death, first taken by the Tyrant for his trueth to the King, found the meanes to fet this Duke in his top, joined Gendemen together in aide of King Henry, deuifing first the marriage betweene him and King Edwards daughter: by which his faith, he declared the good Lancafter and fernice to both his mafters at once, with infinite benefit to the Realme, by the conjunction of those two by Bishop Morbloods in one; whose severall titles had long time difquieted the Land; hee fled the Realine, went to Rome, neuer minding more to meddle with the world, till the noble Prince King Heavy the feuenth got him home againe, made him Archbishop of Canterbury and Chancellor of England, whereunto the Pope ioined the honour of a Catdinal! Thus Archbiboo of living many dayes in as much honour, as one man canterbury, Lote might well with, ended them fo godly, that his death Chancellor, and with Gods mercy, well changed his life.

(24) This man therefore, as I was about to tell you by the long and often alternate proofe aswell of prosperitie as aduerse fortunes, had gotten by great His wiledome experience (the very mother or miltrefle of Wife- and experience dome) a deepe infight in politicke worldly dritts-Whereby perceiuing now this Duke glad to commune with him, fed him with faire words, and many pleafant praifes. And perceining by the processe of their communication, the Dukes pride now and then balke out a litle bread of enuy, rowards the glory of the King, and thereby feeling him easis to fall The deepe polout, if the matter were well handled: hee craftily liey of B. feemed to follow then to leade him. For when the Duke first began to praise & boast of the King, and thew how much profite the Realme should take by his raigne; Morton answered thus: Surely my Lord, The communifolly it were for me to lye, for if I would sweare the Cation of the Duke and D. contrary, your Lordship would not ween I beleeue, but that if the world would have gone, as I could haue wished, King Henries son had had the Crowne, and not King Edward. But after that God had ordered him to lose it, and King Edward to raigne, I was neuer fo mad, that I would with a dead man firiue against a quicke. So was I to King Edward a taithfull Chapplaine, and glad would have beene, that his child should have succeeded him. Howbeit, if the fecret indgement of God haue otherwise provided, I purpose not to spurne against the pricke, nor labor to fet vp, that God putteth downe. And as for the late protector and now King; and even there he left: faying, that hee had already medled too much with the world, and would from that day meddle with his Booke and his Beades, and no further. (24) Then longed the Duke fore to heare what he would have faid, because he ended with the king and there so suddainly stopped, and exhorted him his cuftody, where he might account himselfe at home, and else had he beene put in the hands of them with whom he should not have found the like fauour. The Bishop right humbly thanked him and said: In good faith my Lord, I loue not to talke much of Princes, as a thing not all out of perill though the word be without fault. Foralmuch as it shall not be taken as the party meant it, but as it pleaseth the Prince to construe it. And euer I think on Afops tale, that when the Lyon had proclaimed vpon paine of death there should no horned heast abide in the wood, one that had in his forehead a bunch of flesh, fled away a great pace. The foxe who saw him runne so fast, asked him whether, he made all that hafte? and he answered, In faith, I neither wot, nor recke, so I were once hence, because of this Proclamation made against horned beasts. What foole (quoth the Foxe) thou maist abide well enough, the Lion meant not thee, for it is no horne that is in thy head. No mary (quoth he) that wot I wellynough, but what if he call it a horne, where am I then ? The Duke laughed merrily at the tale, and faid, my Lord I warrant you, neither the Lion nor the Boare shall picke any matter at any thing heere spoken, for it shall neuer come to their eares. In good faith Sir, faid the Bishop, if it did, the thing that I was about to fay, (taken aswell as afore God I meant it) could deferue but thankes; and yet taken more to wit what it was; whereupon the Bishop as I weene it would, might happely turne me to litle good, and you to leffe. Then longed the Duke vet faid, in good faith my Lord, as for the late Protector. fith he is now King in possession, I purpose not to dispute his title, but for the weale of this Realme, wherof his Grace hath now the gouernance, and my felfe am a poore member, I was about to wish, that to those good abilities, whereof hee hath already right many, little needing my praise, it might yet have pleased God for the better store, to have giuen him some of such other excellent vertues meet for the rule of a Realme as our Lord hath planted in the person of your Grace; and there left a-(25) The Duke formewhat maruailing athis fuddaine paules, said: My Lord, I note your often brea-come to any direct or perfect fentence in conclusion, whereby either I might have knowledge what your intent is now towards the King, or what affe-Gion you beare towards mee. For the comparison of good qualities ascribed to vs both, maketh mee not a little to muse, thinking that you have some other printe imagination imprinted in your heart, which you bee abashed to disclose, and specially to me, which on my honour doe affure you to be as fecret in this cafe as the deafe and dumbe person to The Duker pre the finger, or the Tree to the Hunter. The Bishop testation being somewhat bolder, considering the Dukes promile, but most of all animated; because hee knew the Duke desirous to be magnified, and also he perceined the inward hatred which hee bare towards King Richard, hee opened his stomacke to the bottome, and faid: My fingular good Lord, fith the time of my captinitie, which being in your graces custodie, I may rather call it a libertie, then a strait imprifonment, in avoiding of idleneffe mother of all vices, in reading bookes and ancient pamphlets, I have founde this tentence written; that no man is borne free and at libertie of himselfe onely: for one part of dutie he oweth to his parents, another part to his friends and kindred; but the native Countrey The delite of all in the which he first rasted this pleasant & flattering world, demandeth a debt not to be forgotte. Which faying, caufeth mee to confider in what cafe the Realme, my native Countrey, now standerh; and in what estate and assurance before this time it hath continued; what gouernour we now haue, and what ruler wee might haue; for I plainely perceive (the Realme being in this case) must needes decay, and be brought to confusion : but one hope I have that is, when I confider your noble personage, your juflice and indifferencie, your feruent zeale and ardent loue towards your natural! Countrey; and in like manner, the loue of your countrey towards you, the great learning, pregnant wit, and eloquence, which to much doth abound in your person; I must needs thinke this Realme fortunate, which hath such a Prince in store, meete and apt to bee Gouernour. But on the other fide, when I call to memory the good qualities of the late Protector, and now ealled King, so violated by tyranny, so altered by vsurped authoritie, and so clouded by blind ambition, I must state voder the needs fay, that hee is neither meet to bee King of for tyranny of the noble a Realme, nor fo famous a Realme meet to be gouerned by such a tyrant, Was not his first enterprise to obtaine the Crowne, begunne by the murther of divers personages? did hee not secondarily proceed against his owne natural mother; declaring her openly to be a woman given to carnall affection and diffolute living? declaring furthermore, his two brethren and two Nephewes to bee bastards, and to bee borne in adultery? yet not contented, after hee had obtained the Garland, he caused the two poore innocents his Nephewes, committed to him, to bee most shamefully murthered: the blood of which Blood cryeth littie babes daily cry to God from the earth for vent for bloody rengeance. What furery can be in this Land to any per- geance, ion, either for life or goods, vnder fuch a cruell Prince, which regardeth not the destruction of his owne blood, and much leffe the loffe of others. But now to conclude, what I meane towards your

By my troth (quoth the Duke) we will begin with my Ladie of kickmond the Earles mother, which knoweth where he is in Britaine; fith you will begin that way (faid the Bifhop) I have an old friend with With whom and the Countesse, called Reinald Bray, for whom I shall how to begin the fend, if it be your picafure : fo the Bishop wrote for figues. him to come to Brecknock, who straite came backe with the messenger, where the Duke and Bishop declared what they had deuised for the preferment of the Earle of Richmond, fonne to his Ladyand Mistresse: willing her first to compasse how to obtaine the goodwill of Queene Elizabeth, and also of her eldeft daughter : and after fecretly to fend to her fonne in Britaine, to declare what high honour was prepared for him, if he would sweare to marrie the Ladie Elizabeth affoone as hee was King of the Realme. With which conclusion, Reinold Bray with a glad heart returned to the Counteffe his Lady. Bray thus Inf departed, the Bishop told the Duke, that if he were in his Ifle of Ely, he could make many friends to further their enterprise. The Duke knew this to bee true, but yet loth to loofe the fociety of fuch a Counfellor, gaue him faire words, faying, he should shortly depart well accompanied for feare of enemies, but

When the Earle had received this joyfull mefthe same enterprise against the King, had knowledge fage, hee brake to the Duke of Britaine all his fecrets. that Buckingham was forfaken of his Company, and advertifing him thathe was entred into a fure & fledfast hope to obtaine the Crown of England, defiring

(32) In the meane season the chiefe of the conspiracy in England beganne many enterprises, which being neuer fo privily handled, yet knowledge therof came to King Richard, and because hee knew the Duke of Buckingham to be the chiefe head, and aide of this combination; he thought it most necessarie to plucke him from that part, and thereupon addreffed his louing letters vnto the Duke, requesting him most carnestly to come to the Court, whose The Deke of graue aduise for counsell hee then stood much in Exchingham is fenz for by the need of; with many words of kind complements to bee vttered from the mouth of the meffenger: but the Duke mistrusting those sweet promises proceeded out of a bitter intent, and knowing K. (26) The next day the Duke fent for the Bishop, to whom hee faid, My Lord of Ely, I must needs in heart thinke, and with mouth confesse, that you bee a fure friend, a truftie counsellor, and a very louer of your countrey. And fith that at our last communication, you have disclosed the secrets of your hart touching the now viurper of the crown, & also have alittle touched the advancement of the two noble families of Yorke and Langaster, I shall likewise declare vnto you my privie intents and fecret cogita-tions. And to beginne, when King Edward was deceased, I then began to studie, and with deliberation to ponder in what manner this Realme should be gouerned: I perfwaded with my felfe to take part with the Duke of Gloucester, whom I thought to be as cleane without diffirmulation, as tractable without iniurie, and fo by my means he was made Protector both of the King and Realm; which authoritie being once gotten, he neger ceased printly to require mee and other Lords aswell spirituall as temporall, that he might take vpon him the Crowne, till the Prince came to the age of foure and twenty yeres, and were able to gouerne the Realme as a fufficient King:

which thing, when hee law me fomewhat flicke at, hee then brought in instruments, authenticke Doctors, Proctors, and Notaries of the Law, with depofitions of divers witnesses, testilying King Edwards children to bee bastards: which depositions then I thought to be as true, as now I know them to bee fained. When the faid depositions were before vs read, and diligently heard, he flood up bare headed, faying: well my Lords, even as I and you would that my Nephewes (bould have no wrong : (o I pray you doe mee nothing but right, for these witnesses and sayings of famous Doctors bee true: For I am onely the undubitate heire to Richard Plantagenet Duke of Yorke, adjudged to be the very heire to the Crowne of this Realme by autho-ritie of Parliament. Which things fo by learned men for veritie to vs declared, caused mee and others to take him for our lawfull and undoubted Prince and Soueraigne Lord. So againe by my ayde, hee of a Protector was made a King: but when he was once crowned King, and in full possession of the Realme, hee cast away his old conditions. For when I my felfe fued to him for my part of the Earle of Hertfords Lands, which his brother Edward wrongfully deteined from me, and also required to have the office of the high Constableship of England, as divers of my noble ancestors before this time have had,

and in long discent continued; in this my first fuire, hee did not only first delay mee, and afterwards deny me, but gaue mee fuch vnkinde words, as though I had neuer furthered him: all which I suffered patiently. But when I was informed of the death of the two young Innocents, O Lord, my heart inwardly grudged, infomuch as I abhorred the fight of him;

I took my leave of the Court, and returned to Breek-nocke to you, but in my iourney as I came, I had diners imaginations how to deprine this vnnaturall vncle. First, I fantasied, that if I list to take vpon me the Crowne, now wasthe way made plaine, and occasion given. For I well faw bee was disdained of the Lords Temporall, and accurfed of the Lordes Spirituall. After divers cogitations of this matter, as I rode betweene Worcester and Bridgeworth, I encountred with the Lady Margaret Counteffe of Richmund, now wife to the Lord Stanley, who is the very daughter, and fole heire to John Duke of Sommer fet my Grandfathers elder brother, so that she & her sonne Henry Earle of Riehmund be both between me and the gate, to enter into the Maiestie roiall, & getting of the Crowne; and when wee had a little communed concerning her fonne, and were departed, I then beganne to dispute with my selfe, wha-

ENRIE of that name the seauenth, hauing by fuch mixt meanes of valor and practife as are alreadie described, obtained the possession of Englands Crown, we must now prefent vnto you his actions in the person and state of a King, maintained by him with like mixture of courage and skill as it was atchieued; to the verification of that rule, That things are kept by the same Arts whereby they were gained. In de-scribing whereof, wee meane nothing lesse, then for humoring the vaine admirers of phrase and conceit, to mount vp into Panegyricall flourishes, in honor of the man, though his excellent vertues would worthily beare, if not duely also exact them: yet may wee not omit to observe, that as in his attaining to Generall obserwee not offine to offere that as in his accarding to the Crowne, there was (through divine providence) a concurring difpolition of all important Circumfacts, without which his attempt might have proble course. nances, without within attempt might have pro-used difafterous; so hee, having now possessed the Soueraigne power, and mastered the State in the maine pointes, cassly made circumstances waite vpon his wildom, and to take their forme from his directions: Of the first kind, wherein his feliciity deserues to be celebrated, were these. That he by the Male-line a meere stranger to both the roiall houses, as descended from the Welfb and French, and by the female springing out of such a family of Lancaster (the Beaufords) as by the same law which enabled it to inherite in ordinary estates, was made Concurrence of incapable of succession in the Regalitie, should so surcherances to fafely be contained away into forraine parts, there lefigues. to continue an head of expectation and revolt, dustrit

(though a very honorable, wife, instand necessary Prince, after hee was somewhat setled) as for his fake, to neglect (in a fort) fo many natural! heires of the house of Yorke, some of them in right preceding Richard, such were the children of Edward the ction) truly noted concerning his atchieuement of fourth, and George Duke of Clarence, Richards elder brethren, and all of them inft barres to the Earle of obstacles, to sway this Scepter, when neuther Title, neraigne change of fortune, with such moderation, and Richmand, who scarce had any thing of a legal title, or of a warrantable intention; but his purpose to remove an V surper, and marry the Lady Elizabeth, the rightfull inheritrice. Thirdly, a long and fatall Sacknesse of Richard in his warlike preparations, through the meer contempt of his enemy the Earle, which was the cause, that both hee landed securely and Richard was driven to fight in a manner with tumultuary, rather then trained forces. And finally, that a principall, potent, noble, and yet a deepely fuspected Conspirator, (as being Father in law to the Earle) should have charge, vnder Richard, ouer a chiefe portion of his Army at the very instant of ioyning battell.

Anne the young Dutcheffe of Britaine, (by their aduife, who affected to preferue the liberty of that Dukedome, which by vnion with France, would be abforpt & extinguished,) had so farre entangled and engaged her selfe with the Procurators of Maximilian King of Romans, that shee was not only publikely cotracted but cocented (for vttermost performace of those rires whereof marriage by proxic was honorably capable) to take upon her the Bride, and being folemnly bedded, to permit Maximilians Deputie, in the presence of fundry Noble witnesses aswell men as women, to put in his legge, ftript naked to the knee, betweene the spousall sheetes, that ceremony feeming to amount to a Confummation. Charles King of France, notwithstanding these solemnities, and his owne particular engagement with the Lady Margaret daughter of Maximilian, (whom for the purpose of marriage he had already entertained into France,) did so ambitiously and vehemently couet rogaine Britaine, that vpon confidence of his force, hee refolued to breake through all refpects. and not only to offend all his forreine friends, but to make them his just enemies, rather then to faile in effectuation. Inftruments are therefore very fecretly fet on worke, and batterie is placed with bags of gold at all the opportunities which might let in his purpose. Ambassadorsalso (the Lord Frances of Lutzenburg, Charles Marinian, and Robert Gagwine *Generall of the Order of the holy Tranitie, are dispatched to Henrie, praying that with his good will he might dispose of the body of the Lady Anne in matriage according to the right which he had thereunto. as the chiefe Lord of whom shee held the Dukedome Henry deried the request, but yeelded not withstanding to send Ambassadors into France there to Capitulate about a peace. The French carried this affaire with notable Art, for to divert the world for looking in to the depth of their drift. King Charles still detained the young Lady Margaret, Maximilians daughter; fo as at most it could be but suspected, that Charles meant to match her with some of his blood, and all the entercourse of orators and Ambassadors yield in the meane time, tended but to hold the English bufied vpon other objects, till they had wrought their feate in the Court of Britaine. For Maximilian, (to let the world see what injuries shall be offered even to Kings, that are not ftrong) him they alrogether neglected; King Henrythey plaied with, and Ferdinando King of Castile (who was ready to joine with Maximilian and Henrie against the French) they refolue to appeale, with rendring vp vnto him the Counties of Ruscinson, and Perpinian; as accordingly they *did, without *reemburgement of one penny of those 300000. Crownes, for which Iohn King of Arragon (father to Ferdinando) had morgaged them. The young Ladies doubts, riling either out of religion, or point of honor, his cunning Agents, and Emissaries wipe away with these solutions. That Maximilians daughter was not of yeeres to consent, and therefore the contract betweene King Charles and her did not binde either in law, or conscience: That her owne contract with Maximilian was void, for that it was done without the consent of her Soueraigne Lord, King Charles, whose ward or Client shee was. The Ladie vanquished in her judgement with these reasons, attracted with the present greatnes of King Charles, and loath by refusall to make her Countrey the seat of a long and miserable warre, fecretly yeelded to accept of another husband. Thomas Goldstone Abbot of S. Augustines in Canterbury, and Thomas Earle of Ormond in Ireland, King Henries Ambassadors into France, having beene dandled by the French during these illustue practises, returned without other fruite of their labors.

King Henry having formerly in abundant manner provided himfeife of treafure, was ready before the day with a roiall army: but Maximilian (whose will to worke the vttermost mischiefe to France was not doubted, being sent vnto by King Henry, signifying ioine with Henry, his forwardnes, was found vtterly vnfurnished. For subduing whereof though King Henry had heretofore given him good and fucceffefull affiftance vnder the conduct of Giles Lord Dambeney Gouernour of Callis, the Lord Morley and others, whereby he the rather ouercame; yet was hee the feebler, as then, by reason of so fresh exhaustures. King Henry with good cause was not a little troubled at these newes, secretly signified by his trustie Almner M. Christopher Privick, and Sir Richard Rifley knight, his Ambassadors to Maximilian; For hee was very loath to vindergoe fo great an Action voon his particular strengths, though he doubted not to findea potent party among the Britaines, (whose affections were as yet but loofely fetled toward King Charles,) and yet farre more loath to deceine the expectation of his owne people, who had to largely contributed; Chiefly the City of London, out of which, even in those daies he received for his furniture in that voiage almost * ten thousand pounds from the Commoners, and (2s it feemes by our Author) two hundreth pounds besides from enery Alderman, where the same King could not, but with large countributions to the king fome difficulty, leuie in the third yere of his Reigne a loane of foure thousand pounds, whereof three of the best Companies are noted (as for having done and described extraordinarily) to have lent about nine hundred. And verily this wise King (knowing how great a strength that rich City was vnto him) humored that people with all forces of popularities, for himfelfe did not onely come among them, King Heariespa and cause himselfe to beentred a brother, in *one pulsations in Low of their Companies, but warethehabiteat a publike feaft, and fare as Maifter, as is verie credibly re- Taylors, ported out of the Records of their Hall. His wifdome therefore faw, that in giving over the invalion of France; he should stoathfully abandon a goodly occasion of making himselfe vniuersally acceptable to his people. His resolutions therefore are by him at leastwise pretended to continue, and for that cause he sufficiently encreaseth his numbers, that he might feeme able to goe through with that enterprize alone; and though the time of yeere were too farre fpent (for he landed not at Caleis, till the fixth day of October) yet marcheth he with his whole forces to- A.D. 1492. ward Boloigne, being wel affored that with this trow. doth now beginne to disclose it selfe, and make new businesses for King Henry. The inglorious glorie of the first invention in his raigne of this kind of vexation. Lambert Simmels person had given to his Mafter the wily Simon, so that our Dutchesse was but an imitatrix, and yet perhaps thee gaue not place in any point to the first example, or Archtype, neuertheleffe the fortune of the first deuise, being no more successefull then it was, might reasonably have deterred her from the edition of a second: but whether it were an immortall enuie toward the Lancafirian race, or a burning zeale of advancing one that might at leastwife beare the name of a Plantagenet, though by any finister practises; as if it had beene lawfull to attaine her ends (admitthem just) by any iniurious courles, fhee resolues to erect another Idoll, as perceining by the first, how notable an engine imposture was, to trouble Henry; being well affored, that England was ful of corrupt humors, and ill affections to worke vpon, not so much through the defert of her present King, as for that the dregges which naturally relide in the bottom of mens hearts, where most bloudy and barbarous factions have for along time weltered, and wurried one the other with various euent, were not clenfed and avoided. The Dinell therefore ready to furnish all attempts which may raife trouble, and mischiefe, easily fitted The Dutcheffe her. There was come therfore to her hands a youth of Burgundy ad-dreffech a Pfeu in adorned with fuch a shape, as might easily perswade the beholders was worthy of a noble fortune: he had thereunto a naturall fine wir, and (by reason of his abode in England in K. Edwards dayes) could speake our language, as also some other, which hee had by a kind of wandring travell obtained. This youth was borne (they say) in the City of Torney, and called "Polyd Verg. Bern Andr. MS. *Peter Warbecke, the *fon of a converted Icw, whose Godfather at Baptisme King Edward himselfe was. The English in * contempt (and for a note perhaps *Tolyd. Verg. of his forraine birth) did afterward call him by a diminuriue of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Him the Dutchesse (as a fitte peece of timber, out of which to carue a new Idoll) moulds by degrees, & makes him take shape according to that Idea, which shee had prefigured inher working imagination, before the which the late honours of her house conspicuous in three Princes (which altogether made not twenty and fine yeeres of raigne) did so perpetually houer, as her foule could neuer take contentment but in the hope that the house of Yorke should againe be the dwelling place of Maiefty.

(33) Her offence against Henry wanted not ma-Caufes moning ny feeming reasons, but none so great, as that hee the Dutchesse to had flaine her own brother King Richard, who albe-it he was there reputed murtherer of her Nephewes, fo mortal hatted, yet were they a degree more removed from her, and fo leffe deere in likelihood then a brother; and how focuer shee might secretly detest, or believe the commitmet of that parricide, yet could the neuer brooke (seeing they were gone) that the reward of her brothers death, and that cuen to him who flew him should beethe Crowne of England, whereby not onely her brother, but the whole male-line of her family was for euer to bee excluded; much leffe could finee (a Plantagenet) abide that Henry, who brought to the Crowne the furname of a newly raised Familie. These and other considerations in the breaft of a Lady, bred vp in a dominating Family, her felfe a Dowager, in fuch a fortune, as in which face was Paramount for the time, and absolute without controlment, being carelesse withall of sauing for posterity, because shee was without a child and in that regard the more abundantly stored with treafure; all which made her fpirits ouer-boile with impatience and virulency; to farre forth, that hauing infused al her principles into Peter her creature under the Title of Richard Plantagenet, second son of King Edward the fourth; the most couertly sends him into Portugall, from thence to take his learean flight, as *elfewhere is related. Neuerthelesse, there will not (perhaps) want some, who in defence of the Dutchesse, hadrather referre it to Magnanimity, and Noblenesse of Spirit, in seeking the honour of her house; which, if it might passe for such among the heathen, yet can it not among Christians; much the leffe, for that her duty to England, & the royall flourishing estate of her own Neece, the right heire, exacted at her hands a greater tendernesse. (34) That Peter Warbecke should bee inflamed by her fauours, and encouragements, to dare in earnest the personation of a Kings sonne, seemes not a thing to beeadmired; for there is in humane nature (which ties not her felf to Pedigrees, nor Parentages) a kind of light matter, which will eafily kindle, being toucht with the blazing hopes of ambitious propositions. He therefore you the first difclose of * himselfe, did put on so excellent a seeming Perkix Warbecke fits the Dutch-cheffes turne, by as might inftly mone King Henry to bee icalous, whereunto the pernitious practife might come at last; for there wanted nothing in the whole forme of the young vpftart, but onely the conscience of a truth, and truth it felfe: which makes me call to mind * what one hath written of a goodly white Saphyr in Venice, made by art so neerely to resemble a true Diamond, that with much difficulty, and but by one onely lapidary, it was discouered; which if it had beene graced with some great Princes, wearing, what could want to have made it paffable for a very Diamond of greatest value? Perkin came such from out of the Burgundian forge; and (if his parentage beerespected) assumed the image and resemblance of a king, being otherwise not so much as a meane Gentleman. Neither can it be maruclled at, if such a Phantasme as this, did abuse, and crouble the common people of that time; for even to fuch as do write thereof, it begets a kind of doubt (which without some little collection of their spirits doth not easily vanish,) it seeming almost incredible, that fuch a bloudy play should meetly be difguifed and fained; the discouery therefore was worthy fuch a wit as King Henries, and the push it gaue to his foueraignty did throughly try his litting, being of force enough to have cast an ordinarie rider out of fadle.

> (35) Therfore, it was the Dutchesses missortune, that her inventions (if they were hers) had to encounter so politicke and constant a man as King Henry; whose prudence searcht into the abstruses ferrets, and whose diligence ouercame all difficulties. Yet the Lady Margarets course to vent her Creature at the first was exquisite; for the (as in a Magicke practife) having kept him fecret till shee faw her time canfeth him to bee closely conuayed into * Portugall; from whence (attended with fitte affociates and Priuadoes) hee failes into Ireland (the Foster-place and nursery of immortall good will to the house of Yorke) where (notwithstanding their late calamities,)he so strongly enchanted that rude peo-ple with the charmes of false hopes, and mists of feemings, as he was fure of partakers in great plenty. Charles the eight, King of France, hearing (and perhaps beleeuing) that the Duke of Torke was aliue, Asummarie read and glad to have so probable an occasion of doing full forume as full forume as mischiefe to Henry of England, in regard of these flagrat enmitties which as steen remained vnquench: liked, let be was published. betweene them, inuites Duke Richard moit officioully to Paris, and belides all other honours, affigned him (at his comming) a guard for his person, whereof the Lord Congreshall was Captaine. Afterward there repaired to this new Duke, Sir George Neuill Knight, (a * bastard of the noble house of the stow Annal. Neuils,) Sir lohn Taylor, Rowland Robinson, and about an hundreth English, to whom (as a principal) wee may adde * Stephen Frion, French Secretary to King Henry himselfe; all which, together with the whole Strategeme, was smoakt out of France with the first graine of incense sacrificed upon the Altars of Peace at Boloign, after the same was once made and ratified (as you have heard) between the French and vs. The Dutchesse then iceing her artificiall creature thus turned againe v pon her hands pretends an extreame ignorance that ever shee had seene him before that present, and an excessive ion for his mir aculous escape, and prefernation, which feemed fuch to her (as face pretended) as if hee had beene reuiued from death to life, and that the fable might want no quickning, which her personall countenancing, or her Court could afford, shee openly salutes him by the delicate Title of the * White Rofe of England, and questi- ders with the Dutcheffe. ons him of the manner of his escape, with such like, Stow done to beget a firme beliefe in the hearers, that the neuer had seene him before that time, and that he was indeed her Nephew Richard Duke of Yorke. The No. bility of Flanders accordingly, doc vnto him all honour, and thee environs his person with a guard of thirty men in murrey and blew. Neither was hee in any point wanting to his part; but fitted fuch likely answeres to all questions, and such princely behauiours to all occasions, as made fame bold to publish him with the fullest blast of her Trumpet, for no other then a true Richard Plantagenet; and as it is so observed of some, that by long vsing to report an vntruth, at last forgetting themselues to bee the Authors thereof, beleeve it in earnest; so these honors making our Peter to bury in vtter obligion his birthes obscurity, he seemed to bee perswaded; that hee was indeed the felfe partie, whom hee did so exactly personate. Nonelty, and impudency were scarce euer knowne to haue found more applause, or beliefe, euen among many verie wife, and (otherwise) worthy men; who moued in conscience, and not onely vpon discontent, inclined to partake with this new Plantagenet, as the onely right heire of the English Diadem, as if, whether he had beene the true one, it was past dispute. This intoxication, & abulion of the world, was wonderfully encrealed by the secret renolt of Sir Robert Clifford Knight, whom(as one that had feene, and knowne the true Richard) the cunning conspirators in England had fent over, to informe himfelfe, and them, whether be was indeed as bee feemed. Sir Robert (whose presence and errand were to the Dutchesse most welcome,) Sir Rob Liffing being brought to his fight, did forthwith gine credite, and constantly fignifie, that this was indeed Richard Plantagenet, the true Duke of Yorke, and that he well knew him for Such. Money and encouragements, were hereupon fent out of England, from fuch as fauoured him; among whom was * Sir william Stanley Lord Chamberlain to King Hemy (by whose punctual revolt from K. Sir Robert Cliffordathis comming into the Kings presence, (though hee was secretly before assured of his life) most humbly praying and obtaining pardon, appeached (among many others) Sir William Stanley Lord Chamberlaine. The King would not at first giue credite (or at leastwise pretended, not to giue credite) to the acculation of a Peere lo great, and so neere vato him: but vpon farther search, finding the same confirmed with circumstances, and particularly, for that he faid to Clifford, * Hee would neuer beare Armes against the young man, if he knew him for certaine to be the sonne of King Edward, hee resola ueth to vie feuerity against the delinquent. From Wels they proceed to Salisbarie, thence to Winchester, and so toward Kent, where the Countrey was fetled and prouided. But the King farther doubting that the Scots would take fresh occasion, by these seditious vproares, to inuade the borders of his Realme, dispatched Thomas Howard Earle of Surrey (*a Peere of excellent vertue) to defend those parts, with the helpe of the Bishopricke of Durham, and the Marches, till these homecommotions were appealed; that then the Lord Dawbeney might with a just and full Army profecute the warre against the Scots. But Iames their King, perceiving the end of the English intestine warres, would be the beginning of his troubles, thought it best by way of anticipation to weaken his enemy before hand as much as hee could, and thereupon fiercely inuaded Northumberland againe, and belieged Norham Caffell belonging to Richard Fox, whom the King for his noble feruices and de-

Scotland, and tooke such revenge as the shortnesse of their iodaine pronisions would enable. (47) The Rebels on the other fide, (whom king Henry thought not good to encounter in their first heates; but fuffered them to tire their fury, and furbate themselues with a long march, the countries as they past being forelaide from loyning with them) comming neere to Kent, found few, or no partakers there; but the Country strongly defended against them by the Earle thereof, the Lords Abargenie and Cobham, with other principall men and their followers; which made divers of the Rebels fecretly shrinke and abandon the enterprise. But the Lord Audley, Flammocke, Michael Isfeph, and the rest, kept on their way, and encamped vpon Blackeheath, between Greenewich and Eltham, from the top whereof they might behold the Citie of London, & the whole branery of that Horizon. Here they refolue to abide the King, or to affaile London. That the faid French King had liftned vnto Cardinall Poole, who was fent to him from the Pope to stirre warres against England. 3. That contrary to his Couenant hee had entred alliance with the house of Medicis, and had married his daughter Magdalen vnto James the fift King of Scotland, then an hostile enemy vnto King Henry. 4. That hee had made fuit to match his fecond sonne Henry Duke of Orleance, with Lady Mary, the onely then Heire apparant of England, which when it came to conclusion, was put in suf-

(65) These considerations no doubt drew the King to bee visconstant to them that were viscon-

The decree of the Lawlers in the Vni-uersity of Paris.

We the Deane and Colleage of the Vniversity of Paris. after many disputations and reasons, made upon both sides, turning and searching of Bookes, both by the Law of God, the Popes Law and the Civill Law, we say, that the Pope hath no Power to dispense in this case of Matrimo-Teouen under the Seale of their faculty at Saint Iohn Lateranense in Paris, May 2. 1530.

The Indgement of the Dinines in the Vninerfity of Paris.

The Deane and the faculty of holy Divinity in the Vni-uerfity of Paris to all them to whom this present writing shall come, wisheth Safety in Christ ; For the Question propoled we came together in the Church of Saint Martin, and there for the same cause had a solemne Masse of the Holy Ghost, and upon our oathes determine, that the forefaid Marriage with the Brothers wife departing without children is so forbid by the Lawes of God and Nature, that the Pope hath no power to dispence with such Marriages, whether they be contract or to be contracted; to which this our affertion we have caused the Seale of our faculty, with our Notaries signe to be put to this present writing. Dated in our Generall Congregation July 2. Anno 1530.

The determination of the Civilians of the Vniuerfity of Aniou.

After weethe Doctors and Rector had discussed and examined many places aswell of the Law of God as of mans Law, opon sufficient deliberation taken, wee define and determine that neither by the Law of God nor of Nature, st is permitted for any Christian man, no not with the authority of the See Apostolike, or with any dispensation granted by the Pope to mary the wife that his brother hath left. The Determination of the Vniuerfity of Burges.

We the Deane and facultie of Dininity, in the Vninersity of Burges, after the example of Saint Paul the Doctor of the Gentiles, begin with praser to the quieting of the conscience to whom this our writing shall come; the Quesion moved is whether the brother taking the wife of his dead brother, the marriage confummated, and perfect, be a thing lawfull or no. We by much labour and turning of Bookes, every one of os a part by himselfe, free from corruption, the ett. to obey the truth, finde it forbidden by the Leuiticall law which is Gods, and that such marriage is an abhominable discouering of his brothers shame, which cannot be allowed by the authority of any man: which our determination we have caused to be signed with the seale of our faculty, the tenth day of I une, and yeere of our Lord. 1530.

The opinions of the Dinines in the Vniuerlity of Bonomy.

All wee Doctors of Divinity in this Vniversity, vonto whom this Question was propounded, whether it was forbidden only by the Ordinance of the Church, or elfe by the Law of God, that a man might not marry the left wife of his brother departed without children, and having examined the matter enery one of vs alone, lastly came altogether, and as it were line by line, and rule by rule, brought forth thereasons for the contrary part, with those of the most Reverend Father Cardinall Casetaine, yea and of the dispensation for raising up seed to his brother, spoken of in Deuteronomie; thus we determine, give indgement, and say, and confidently doe hold and witnes that such marriage is horrible accur fed, and to be cried out uppon, and utterly abhominable not only for a Christian man, but for an Infidel unfaithfull or heathen: and that it is prohibited under greeuous paines and punishments by the Law of God, of Nature, and of man, and that the Pope, though he may doe much, unto whom Christ gaue the keies of the Kingdome of Heauen, hath no power to a dispensation to anie man to contrast fuch marriage: In witnes whereof we confirme this our sudgement, both under the Seale of our Vniuersity, as also with the Ser's of our Colledge of Do-ctors of Dininity, and have subscribed it in the Cathedrall Church of Bonony this tenth of Iune, the yeare of our Lord. 1530.

The determination of the University of Padua.

Seeing that certaine great Orators and Ambassador occup tou certaine great orains and a monthlater did humbly require of vs. that were would workfafe to fearch out with all difference this question following, whether to marry the wife of our brother departed without children is fordiden such by the Law of the Charch, or by the Law of God also: and if forbid by both the Lawes, whether the Pope may dispence with any man for such Matrimony or no? which Question we have discussed and as farre as we can have made it chere, both private euery man by himselfe and after al together openly we say, indge, decree, witnesse, and for truth affirme, that such marriage is no marriage: yea and that it is abhorred and cursed of enery Christian man, and to be abominate as a greeuous sinne, and that it is cleerely forbidden under cruell penalty by the Lawes of nature, of God, and of man, and that the Pope unto whom the keies of the Kingdome of Heaven are committed by Christ the Sonne of God bath no power to diffense by the right of Law for any cause, suggestion, or excuse, that any such Matrimony should becontracted. In witnesse whereof wee have made this verting, and have authorized it, with the accusional visions writing, and have authorized it, with the accusional Scale of a sincersity, dated at Padua in the Church of the Heremites of Saint Augustine the first of Iuly, and secreof our Lord: 1530.

The determination of the Vniuerfity of Tholouze.

It was treated in our Vniversity of Tholouze : whether it were lawfull for a brother to marry her which had beene wife to his brother now departed, and without children : as also whether the Pope which hath the cure of Christs flacke allowing it by his dispensation, it be lawful. toresolue which, the best Doctors of Disinity, and the Laws, did sweare that they would obey the sacred Counfels, and would follow the holy Decrees of the Fathers and falling to conclusion stucke fast upon this point, that it is lawfull for no man, neither by the Law of God, nor by the Law of nature, to take her to wife that his brother hath left: neither can the Pope dispence with this law of God: as touching the commandement in Deuteronomy that the brother should marry his wife to raise up seede unto him, that his name should not perish among the Tribes of Israel, we answere that that Law was but a shadow and figure of things to come, which vanished away as soon as the substance of the Gospell appeared. Thus have we given our sentence, which wee have signed with our Authenticall Seale of this V niversity. Yeonen at T holouze the Calends or first day of October, the yeere of our Lord, 1530.

med with so wise and learned additions, as doe confirme his Kingly care, both for the Church and common weale:

the true copy whereof to his great fame is as followeth: his destruction to themselues and partakers, but gaue alfo a great aduantage vnto the Seots, the dangerous enemie vnto the Land, and them all : with these and the like perswasions the matter was so forwarded, that a conference was appointed at Dontaster, and foure piedges were lent from the Lord General vnto

First, as touching the maintenance of the Faith, the termes bee so generall, that it would bee very hard to make certaine answere to the same; but if they meane the faith of Christ, to the which al Chriften men be [wonly] bound: wee declare and protest our selfe to be that Prince, that doth entend, and hath alwayes minded to line and die in the mainte-[of the] nance, defence, [and] observation [and] purity of the same. And that no man can or dare set his foote by vs in prouing of the contrary. Maruelling therefore much that ignorant people would goe about to take vpon them to instruct and reach vs (which hath [fomethin?"] beene noted [to be] learned) what the faith should be: And also that they being ignorant people be so prefumtius (feeing that wee and our hole Clergy in Connocation hath in Articles declaryd it) wold take appon them to correct us all therem.] Or that they would bee so ingrate and unnaturall towards vs their most rightfull King, and naturall Soueraigne Lord, without any our defert, vpon faife reports or furmiles to fuspect vs of the same, and give rather credence to forged light tales, then to the very truth by vs thefe twenty eight yeeres vied, and by our deedes approued. To the second which toucheth the maintenance of the Church, and the liberties of the sames we say it is so generall a proposition that without distinctions no man with trouth can answere it, neither by Gods lawes, nor by the lawes of the Realme. For first, the Church which they mean must be known: Second, whether those things which they call liberties, and fay they would maintaine, be things lawfull and beneficiall to the Princes comen wealth, or otherwife. And these knowne wee doubt not but they shall bee answered according to Gods law, equity and inflice. Neuerthelesse for all their generality this wee dare affirme, that (meaning what Church they lift) Wee have done nothing that may not be abiden by, both by Gods lawes and mans lawes, or that is prejudiciall to our common wealth, if our proceedings may bee indifferently confidered. And in our owne Church of England, whereof wee be the supreme head on Earth, we have done [onerous and chargeable to them,] nothing fo [extremely and as many of our Predeceffors have done, vpon much leffer grounds. Wherefore fithens this Article partaineth nothing to any of our Commons, nor that they beare any thing therin, we cannot but reckon a great vnkindnesseand vnnaturalnesse in them, which had leuer a Chorle or twaine should enjoy those profites of their Monasteries, for the supportation and maintenance of abominable life, then that we their Prince should receive the same towardes our extreme charges, doon, and daily sustained for their defence against forraine enemies. The third Article toucheth three things; the first is the lawes, the fecond is the common-wealth, the third, the directors of the lawes under vs. Touching the Lawes, as it becommeth not blind men to judge any colours, ne to take vpon them to beeindges of the same: so wee dare expressy and boldly affirme as a thing that may bee easily and duely proued; that there were neuer in any One of our Predecessors dayes, so many wholesome, commodious and beneficiall Acts made for the common wealth, as have bin made in our time, & firhers fome of them had [eredite] [our affaires] [experience]& doing[in the world,]that wold now parchance fain pycke them thanke without desert. For our Lord forbids that both wee and our Councell should have lost so much time, as not to know better now then weedid in the beginning of our raigne; what were a Common-wealth, and what were against the good and commodity of the same, feeing wee have beene a King thefe twenty eight veeres, and by experience learned the perfitenesse thereof: and although the folly and vnkindnesse of some will not perchance let them so knowledge it, yet wee truft and doubt nor, but the most part of our louing Subjects, speciallie those which bee not seduced by talse reports, doe both thinke it, accept it, and finde it fo. Now touching the Common wealth, what King hath kept his Subjects fo long in wealth and peace, so long without taking or doing wrong one to another; so indifferently miniftred inftice to all estates both high and low; so defended them from all outward enemies: fo fortified the frontiers of his Realme to his no little, and in manner ineftimable charges, and all for their wealthes and fureties? What King hath given among his Subiects moe generall or freer pardons? What King hath beene lother to punish his Subiects, or shewed more mercy among them? these things being so true, as no true man can deny them: It is an unnaturall and an unkind demeanour of you our Subjects to beleeve or deeme the contrary of it: by whose report somer it should be set forth against vs. And the beginning of our raigne, where it is faid that so many Noblemen were Counsellors : we doe not forget who were then Counsellors: for of called Noble, the oon, the Treasurer of England, the other the high Steward of our houshold. Others, [meane] as the Lord Marney and Darey but [cant wel] born [nor] Gentlemen,[and]yet of no great lands, till they were promoted by vs, and so made Knights and Lords; the reft were Lawyers and Priefts, fauing the two the Temporalty there were but two worthy to bee

Bishops of Canterbury and Winehester: If these then bee the great number of Noblemen, that is spoken off, and that our Subjects seemed then contented withall, why then bee they not now much better contented with vs, which have so many Nobles indeed, both of birth and condition of our Councell, For first of the Temporalty in our Priny Councell, wee haue the Duke of Norfolke, the Duke of Suffolk, the Marquelle of Excefter, the Lord Steward (when hee is present) the Earle of Oxford, the Earle of Suffex, the Lord Sandes our Chamberlaine, the Lord Admirall Treasurer of our house: Sir William Paulet Comptroller of our house. And of the Spiritualtie, the Bishoppes of [Canterbury,] Winchester Hereford and Chichester: [And for because it is more then necessary to have some in our Preuy Councell lernyd in our laws, and pacts of the world: wee by the adulte of our hole Councell aforenamyd, did elect and choose into our Preue Councell, and also into they roomes our Chanceler Kings hand, and Privice Celle, thynking them men in all our opinion, most meetest for the same roomes; and wee with our hole Councell thinke it ryght strange, that yee, which bee but bruts and inexpert folke, doe take aponyow to appoint os, who be meet for our Counfell and whoo bee not. Now therefore now how thefe feditions perfors which how farre be thus wrongfullie have borne you thus in hand have fallie abused you,] fons abused, sthat recken there were then more Nobleme in our Priny Councel then be now buryer thogh of our great clemency & princely goodnes, we declare now the truth, to pull our fubicates from that errour and blindnesse they were led and trained into, by false and vntrue surmise and report: Wee would again that every of them knew, that it appertaineth not to any subject, to presume to take vpon him, th'appointment of his King and SoueraigneLordsCouncell. Ne for our part wee woll cake any such thing at any ofour Subjectshands. Wherefore wee would that from henceforth they

And if any of our Subiects can duely prooue the contrary wee shall pro-

(135) This magnificent Monarch was of pre-fence Maiesticall, and of Personage more then ordinarily ral, faire of Complexion and Corpulent of body, very wife and very well learned, of a fudden and ready speach, in youth very prodigall, and in his age very liberall, pleasant and affable, but not to be dallyed with, bolde in attempting, and euer thirstie of potent glory: an expert Souldier, and fauouring fuch as were active or feruiceable, according to the then vitual faying, King Henrie loues aman: and indeed fomewhat too wel the delights with women, as by his many wines heere enfuing, may well appeare.

(136) Katherine the first wife to King Henry was the daughter of Ferdinando the fixt King of Spaine, and widow dowager of Prince Arthur his elder brother, as hath beene faid : the was married vnto this King the third of June : and first of his Raigne, the yeere of faluation 1509, being folemnely crowned with him vpon the twenty fourth day of the fame, and was his wife aboue twenty yeeres, and then diuorced from him by the fentence of the Archbishop of Canterbury : lived three yeeres after by the name A.D. 1533 of Katherine Dowager. Shee deceased at Kimbalton > and yeere of Christ 1535. and lieth interred on the North-fide of the quire in the Cathedrall Church of Peterborow under a hearfe of Blacke Saye, having a white Croffe in the middeft. (137) Anne, the second wife of King Henry, was in the County of Huntington the eight of Ianuary, the fecond daughter of Sir Thomas Bullen, Earle of Wilisbreand Ormand. Shee was solemnly at WindSeptember and twenty foure of his Raigne, having A.D. 1532: one thousand pound given her by yeere; to maintaine her estate. Shee was married vnto king Henry in his Closer at White-Hall, ypon the wenty his day of Ianuary, and yeere of Christ Iesus, 1533, being the foure and twentith of his Raigne, and was Crowned with all due observances, at Westminster upon Whitfunday the first of Iune, where the Crowne of Saint Edward was let vpon her head, the scepter of Gould delinered into her right hand, and the Inory rodde with the Doue into her left. Shee was his wife three yeeres, three monthes and twenty fine daies, when being cut off by the sword the nineteenth of May, her body was buried in the Quire of the Chappell in the Tower, leaving her accused fame to bee A. D. 1536. censured as affections best pleased the vncharitable minded, and her bed to bee possess of avertuous Lady. (138) Iane, the third wife of King Henry, was the daughter of Iohn Seimer Knight, and fifter to Lord Edward Seimer, Earle of Hertford, and Duke of Sommerset. Shee was married unto him the twentieth of May, even the next day after the beheading of Queene Anne, and the twenty eight of his Raigne. Shee was his wife one yeere, fue monthes and twenty foure daies, and died in Child-bed the fourcteenth of October, to the great griefe of the King, who not onely remoued from the place, but kept himfelfe prinate, and wore the Garment of mourning euen in the Festivall time of Christmas, her body was solemnely conneied to Windfore the eight of November following, where the was interred in the middest of the Quire of the Church within the Castell, (139) Annethe fourth wife of King Henry and fifter to William Duke of Cleue was married vnto him the fixth of lanuary in the thirty one yeere of his Raigne, the yeere of Grace, 1540. shee was his wife A.D. 1540. fixe moneths, after which time certaine Lords of the vpper House of Parliament came into the nether, and alleaged cause for which that marriage was vnlawfuil, whereunpon thee was dinorced, and by Statute enacted, that shee should no more be taken for Queene, but should be called the Lady Anne of Cleue. See remained in England long after the Kings death, though small mention is made of her by any of our Writers, only we finde that the accompanied the Lady Elizabeth through London at the folemnizing of Queene Maries Coronation. (140) Katherine the fifth wife of King Henry the eight, was the daughter of Edmund, and Neece vnto Thomas Howard his brother, Duke of Norfolke Shee was married vnto him the eight of August and yeere of Grace 1540. being the thirtie two of his Raigne, at Hampton Court, and continued his Queene the space of one yeere, fixe moneths and foure daies, and for her vnchafte life was attainted by Parliament, and for the same beheaded within the Tower of London the twelfth of February and her body buried in the Channcell of the Chappell by Queene Anne Bullen. (141) Katherine the fixth and last wife of King Henry was the daughter of Sir Thomas Parre of Kendalland fifter to Lord William Parre Marquesse of Northampton, shee was first married to Iohn Neuill, Lord Latimer, and after his decease, vpon the twelfth of July maried vnto the King at Hampton Court, the yeere of Saluation, 1 5 4 3. and thirtie fine of his Raigne: Shee was his wife three yeeres, fixe months and fine daies, and furniting him, was againe married vnto Thomas Seimer Lord Admirall of England, vnto whom she bare a daughter, but died in the same Child-bed, the yeere of Grace, 1548.

His Ishe.

(142) Henrie the first sonne of King Henry by Queene Katherine his first wife, was borne at Rich. mund in Surrey vpon the first of Ianuary, and the first

(143) A sonne not named was borne vnto King Henrie by Lady Katherine his first Oucene in the month of Nouember, and the fixth yeere of his Raigne, who lived not long, and therefore no further mention of him can bee made : the deathes of these Princes King Henrie tooke as a punishment from God, for so he alleaged it in the publike Court held in Blacke-friers London, they being begot on his owne brothers wife.

(144) Marie the third childe and first daughter of King Henrie by Queene Katherine his first wife, was born at Greenewich in Kent, the eighteenth of Februarie in the yeere of Christs humanity, 1518 and the eighth of his Raigne. Shee was by the direction of her mother brought vp in her Childe-hood by the Counteffe of Salisbury her neere kinfwoman, for that as some thought, the Queene wished a marriage betwixt some of her sons and the Princesse, to strengthen her Title by that Aliance into Torke, if the King should die without iffue Male. In her yong yeeres fhee was fued to be married with the Emperour, the King of Scots, and the Duke of Orleance in France, but all the feating, and flee fucceeding her brother K Edward in the Crowne, at the age of thirtie fixe yeeres, marched with Philip King of Spaine, to the great dislike of many, and small content to her selfe. hee being imploied for the most part beyond the Seas, for griefe whereof and the loffe of Calcee, fhee lastly fell into a burning feauer, that cost her her life.
(145) Elizabeth the second daughter of King

Henrie, and first childe by Queene Anne his second wife, was borne at Greenwich, vpon Sunday the feuenth of September, the yeere of Christ Icius, 1534 and twenty fine of her Fathers Raigne, who with due folemnities was baptized the Wednesday following, Archbishop Cranner, the old Dutches of Norfolke, and the old Marchionesse of Dorset being the witnesses at the Font, and the Marchionesse of Excefter at the confirmation : Shee succeeded her sifter Queene Marie in the Monarchy of England, and was for wildome, vertue, piety, and Inflice, not onelie the Mirrour of her Sexe, but a patterne for Gonernment to al the princes in Christendome : whose name I may not mention without al dutiful remembrance, and whose memory vnto me is most deare. amongst the many thousands that received extraordinary fauours at her gracious and most liberall hand

(146) Another man childe Queene Anne bare vnto King Henry, though without life vpon the nine and twentieth of January, and twenty feuen of his Raigne, to the no little griefe of the mother, some diflike of the King, as the sequel of her accusation and death did shortly confirme.

(147) Edward the laft childe of King Henry, and first of Queene Iane his third wife, was borne at Hampton Court, the twelfth of October, the yeere of Grace, 1537. and twenty nine of the Kings Raigne, being cut out of his mothers wombe as is constantly affirmed, like as Iulius Cafar is faid to have been his Godfathers at the Font, was Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Norfolk, his fifter Lady Mary being Godmother, faith Grafton: Sixe daies after his birth he was created Prince of Wales, and at the death of his Father, succeeded him in all his Dominions, of whom more followeth heereafter.

His Naturall Issue.

(148) Henrie Fitz-Roie the natural fonne of A.D. 1519. King Henrie the eight was begotten of the Lady Talboije called Elizabeth Blant, and borne in the Mannor of Blackamoore in Effex about the tenth yeere of his Raigne; at the age of fixe yeeres he was created Earle of Notingham and in the fine and twentieth of his Fathers Raigne ypon the eighteenth of June in the Kings Pallace of Bridewell was made Duke of Richmond and Sommer fet, Lord War-den of the Eaft, West, and Middle-Marches against Scotland, and Lieutenant Generall of all the parts of England Northward, he was a Prince very forward in Marshal Activities, of Good literature and knowledge in the tongues, vnto whom the learned Anti-quary Leland dedicated a Booke; He married Marie daughter of Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolke, Earle Marshall and Lord high Treasurer of England, with whom he lived not long, but died at Saint I ames with whom he fued not long, out that a same 1 ares by wessims for the two and twentieth of Inly in the Thessians that we give the Christ Iesus, 1536, and was buried at Francisch mansatelle in the State of the State of State 1536. by westminster the two and twentieth of July in the mingham in Suffolke.

He tempestuous stormes in the Raigne of this King Henrie the eight, and the violent deluge raised against the Church-state of bis times; bare downe se many religious strong soumdations, and were the destruction of so many beautifull Monasteries, as the onely relation of their numbers and names, would have much interrupted the narration of his history Whers fore to reteine their memorials (though their walles are laid waste) as well for the reuewill infert as I find them vttered and spoken. George Stradion (58) In this case (said hee) good it is to thinke on things past, to avoide the danger of thinges to *come; for I remember aftory written by Fabian "in his Chronicles of the warres betwixt the King "and his Barons, who even then as our Lords doe now, demanded aid of the Maior and Commons " of London, against their Soueraingne King Henry "the third, and that in a cause rightfull, and good for the Common-weale, which was the execution of certain wholesome lawes, somwhat derogating from his princely prerogatine, which hee would not permit. The aide was granted, and quarrell came vnto battell, wherein the Lords prenailed, "and tooke the King and his sonne prisoners. But they againe reftored to liberty, among other conditions this was one, that the King should not "onely grant his free pardon to the Lords, but also " vnto the Citizens of London; which was done, yea and the same confirmed by Parliament. But what of followed? was it forgotten: no furely, nor ne-" uer forgiuen during the Kings life: for the liberties of the City were taken away, ftrangers appoin-"ted to bee our heads and Gouernours, the Citiet zens giuen away both body and goods, and from one perfecution to another, were most milerably "afflicted : fuch it is to enter the wrath of a Prince, which(as Salomon faith) is death : Wherfore, for-

in his absence, was by him observed to be of more capacity then commonly was found in a man of his quality or education; for yeeres, mature, and paffed his middle age; for carriage well aduited, and refolute enough, if not too much, in not apprehending his eminent danger. (121) Vpon him Walpeole therefore meant to worke, conceining for his purpose two special ad-Squier a fit fubuantages : the one, that comming into Spaine a Prifoner, and not a fugitine, hisrcturne into England would be without suspect; the other, that squire had beene emploied in the Queenes Stable, and therefore had liberty of free accesse: But the more to involve what hee intended, hee subtilly caused Squier to be apprehended by the Inquisition, and put > treffe, hee got his heart into his hands, fo that of a Neuter he became a fixed Romanist. (122) This first assay prouing effectuall, for an introduction to his further intendments, he fell into the old fong, whose burden was the tyrannies vsed, and the perfecutions exercised in England against the poore Catholikes; vpon how few persons the Engish State did stand, and how easily those props were to be remooued, if any denoted would put to their hands . Squire who wanted no wit to perceive whereat he aymed; first, gaue some slight signification, and after a more ferious proteflation, that hee was the man, that would facrifice himselfe and prisoner into the boly House: where mollified by dis-his seruice in the cause. (123) The good Father having thus got him into the circle, began then the charme: It were (faid Walpsole projects the killing of the Earle of Effex, he)no doubt a worke meritorious to kill the Earle of Effex; but vnum necessarium, one thing is necessary: And then tould him plainely, that he meant to put a feruice vpon him of great worth, and reward; which he might accomplish without any euident perill of life, becanse it was to bee done not immediately vpon her person , nor in her presence, neither yet in doing it (though hee were seene) should be endangered, being acted as hee would prescribe; and that was, to impoy fon the pommell of the Queenes faddle, at such time as shee should ride abroade, the to poyfon the Queenes Saddle. Pommell being the place, whereon shee would rest her hand, and her hand not vnlikely to touch her mouth or nostrils, would give accesse to the forcible poison. This, said he, might casily be performed, he having familiar acquaintance in the Quirry, yea and that very safely; but if otherwise, and immediate death happened, he should be assured, that for the exchange of this prefent and transitory life, to ensoye the state of a Glorious Sainct in Heaven.

(124) Which Syrens fong ended, and Squire inveigled; confessions, vowes, promises, receite of the Sacrament, and all, confirmed the resolution of the disclish attempt; and to present varying from this Center , Walpoole tould him , that now he flood in the flate of damnation, if hee did not his ottermost endeuour to performe his vow, bidding him remember, how that the sime of backlyding did seldome obtaine pardon; and if he did but once make doubt of the law fulnesse or merit of the act, tiwas enough to cast him head-long downe into hell; and if he did conceine any difficulties, he wished him to confider what it availed a man, to win the whole world, and to loofe his owne foule. (125) Squier thus armed (though not with that complete Armour of the Apostle) fell downe in confession before this Iesuites feete; whom he lifted up, hugd him about the necke, with his left arme (fuch were Squires owne words) and croffing him with his other hand, mumbled a few words in Latine, and then distinctly in English spake thus; His fatherly Be God bie fe thee, and give thee firength my some; bee of good coursee, I pawne my soule for thine, and thou shalt have my praiers deed and aline. Thereupon delivering vnto him the poyfon, directed how it should be vsed, and shewed him the nature of the confection; holes, and so pressed out upon the pommeli of the Queenes saddle; the operation whereof was such, that vpon his hand hee must have a thicke double gloue, least the poyson thercof should in feet himself; whose vigour also was such, as neither continuance of time, nor subtilty of ayre could checke or vn-vertuate the strength : And that the matter might be carried without all suspect, an exchange was accepted of two Spanish prisoners in England, for Kowles and Squire, to be released from Spaine. Occasion being given by the Queenes riding abroad, and her Horic made ready and attending in the Stable-yard, thether squier re-paired, full of euil spirits; and laying his hand vpon the pommel of her Saddle, bruifed out the poyfon in the bladder, saying cheerefully, God faue the Queen; with no better affection then loab bare to Amafa; when with his hand he works him better to Amafa; when he when with his hand he tooke him to kiffe him, but with his fword ftrock him to the heart. His part thus of her. plaide, Gods wonted and wonderfull protection beganne,

(127) The deed thus done, without all mistrust, Squier taking the remaine of the poyfon, within fixe daies after departed to the Sea, and had his entertainment in the Earle of Effex his owne Ship, where feeking to finish his dinelish designe betwixt Faialand Saint Michaels bestowed his confection, vpon the pommels of a wodden chaire, wherein the Earle viually fate at meales : which in like manner (the Lord going to Carlie, fo working)tooke not effect, to the no little admiration of Squier, though very well fatisfied, that the default was not his, but rather in the poylon it selfe; and his vow now discharged (as he thought) he slept the more quiet.

(128) Walpoole the Issuite over-tickled with loye | Squires Tresson of his hoped successe, and not able longer to keepe fecrecy, imparted his treasons to his companions in Spaine, who together with him daily expected the issue thereof, but all things silent, and no newes of the Catastrophe, they chaunged their opinions, and held Squire for a fall-brother, when as also their longing hearts beganne to feare , least the maine cause would bee mard, being cast into so bad a mould. Whereupon a consultation was called, and the Sicophant condemned in the highest degree, whose end must be speedily wrought, or else those Catholike proceedings would furely come to wracke; for that he knowing much, would (as was feared) reueale much more; and therefore it was politikely concluded, that one should be let slip from them into England, to gine information of Squires treasons. (129) This man to have the more credit brought two letters in his budget, the one he affirmed, himself from the letuis had stolne out of a Tefuits study, & the other brought from another person, both which indeed were found to be counterfeit, and squire for the present reputed an honest man. Yet because the matter was tender, and touched nere the quicke, Squire was sent for, and examined ; at first he denies all, but comming to circumstances, something was found hould taken, and the Traitor committed to Prifonwho left alone, began to bethinke him how farre his Confessors Confession might extend, and therefore by good Counsell (the truth withall working)

The wonderfull

Spaniard that England should pay the whole shot, that no cost of any thing was at all spared; of bullets for great shot were two hundred and twenty thousand; of powder foure thousand and two hundred kintals, euery kintall containing a hundred waight; of lead for bullets one thousand kintals; and one thoufand and two hundred kintals of match; seuen thousand muskets and caliners; tenne thousand partizans and halberts; with murthering peeces, double Canons, and field peeces for campe; with store of furniture for carriages, Mules and Horses, so that they were sufficiently prouided both for sea and land. Bread and bisket was baked and wine laide aboord for fixe monthes prouision; fixe thoufand and fine hundred kintals of bacon; three thousand of cheese, besides flesh, rice, beanes, pease, oyle and vineger, with twelve thousand pipes of fresh water, store they had of torches, lanthornes, and lampes, canuas, hides and lead to stop leakes, whips, and butcherly kniues; for what vie wee may imagine. In a word by the report of Don Diego Piementell, the army was two and thirty thousand frong and cost the King of Spaine thirty thousand ducats euery day. Sixty Spanish Hulkes taken, Cables, Copper, and Waxe, beeing the Spanish Kings prouision were taken going to Lisbon.

(242) The English having thus farre proceeded, put againe to Sea, when, vnlooked for, and in a great calme, nine Gallies fell in the winde of their Fleete, and so plaied upon a stragling Barke of Plimouth, that Captaine Caluerley, his Lieutenant, the Mafter, and some of the Mariners, abandoning the veffell, betooke them to their Boates, whereof one, (in which the Captaine and Mafter were) was ouerrunne by the Gallies, and they both drowned. Two other Hulkes also stragling from the Fleete, were fet upon by the Spanis ds, in one of which, Captaine Minshow fought to the last, and very valiantly after his ship was on fire; but whether fired by himfelfe or the enemy, could not be judged; the calme being so ftill, as no succour could bee sent from the fleete, to their great griefe. (243) Thus continuing seventeene daies on board, many of the dead Souldiers were cast into the Sea and the whole now confifted of two thousand men, who comming to Vigo, found every ftreete fencod with a strong Barricadoe, and but only one man in the Towne, the Inhabitants making toward Bayon as fast as they could drive; then was both the Town The English ar and all the Country for feuen miles compaffe fet on a flame . Which seruice thus performed , Sir Franeis Drake with the Queenes ships fafely *arrived at Plitmouth, and vpon the second of July following arriued Sir Iohn Noris, having both of them performed the parts of worthy Generals. (244) Whilft these Realms were at variance each against others, the French were not quiet among themselues, the King somewhat voluptuous, but ex-ceffinely prodigall rowards his fauorites 5the Nobi-lity ambitions, mistrustfull, and disloyall; the Clergy turbulent, and vidutiful, bending all their force and thoughts against the plantation of the truth. To vnite friendship therefore some league had beene made, for confirmation whereof the three Estates were affembled at Blogs. For the Clergy appeared An.D. 1588 one hundred thirty foure deputies, among whom were Octob.17. foure Arch-bishops one and twenty Bishops, and two Generals of Orders; for the Nobility came one hundred and foure score gentlemen; and for the third Effate an hundred foure score and cleuen Deputies, all of them Lawyers and Merchants. Vpon the first fitting, and before these best wits of France, King * Henry made a folemne Oration to perswade vnion, full of linely affection, true magnanimity, and pregnant reasons, delinered with such an admirable eloquence and grace, as it rauished the cares of all present, besides the opening of the propositions; the which, Mantelon, the keeper of the Scale, for him further profecuted ; after him Reynauld de Beaulme, Archbishop of Bourges, Patriarke and primate of Aquitaine, spake in the same argument; and lastly, Michell Marteau, Pronoft and President for the third Effare, confirmed, and confented to all that had beene faid. These things premiled, and Ireland thus recourred that was in hazard to be loft, let vs returne to our English affaires, from whence these Irish bogges have detained vs too (327) On what tearmes the Earle of Effex left Ireland we have already heard, and to what lamentable successe the height of his rife brought him, is now to bee related; wherein hee may be the example of fortunes daliance, and of the vnftayed felicity had in this life; a man indeede filled with the affection of his Prince & the people, & fraught with honourable habilities to purchase both, vntill by his owne vnaduisednesse (for so it must needs be censured) he clouded his honour, wifdome, and loyalty, with the shadowes of his ownediscontents. Whether his Soueraignes fauours were the wings of his ambitions, or the dependancies of men of warre, the pillars of his high hopes, I doe not censure; but that some secret under-workings gave fire to his pasfionate discontents, I doubt not, having seene his owne letters penned in that behalfe. How soeuer, Ana an eminentauthority, followed with the flower and lastly, you faile in that indissoluble duty which you owe chiefest men of warre, and suspected to be too well to your most gracious Soueraigne. A duty imposed uprespected by the Arch-rebell Tir-oen, it was held good policy (vpon another pretended occasion) to on you, not by nature or policy onely, but by that religimuster forces, and to make a Lord Lieutenant Generall of all England, which was, the right honorable Charles Howard Earle of Nottingham Lord high (328) The shew of this preparation was a preuenting prouidence (as was pretended) against a Spanish Nauy in new rigging for the Seas; and indeed such preparation in that Summer was made, as the like had not beene in England since Queene Elizabeth came to the Crowne. For London was allotted to furnish sixteene Ships to the Seas, and six thousand Souldiers for the Land service, whereof three thousand were to rest euer in a readinesse, and the other three thousand (all of them householders) to attend and gard her Maiesties royall Person. And out of many Countries adioyning, such numbers of braue horse and horsemen were gathered, as neuer till then had beene seene; the same whereof was so farre spred, as neither Spaine, nor any other, could have any heart to make attempt this way. (329) But the Earle of Effex arriving in England not onely peaceably, but also very prinately and vnaccompanied (as hath beene faide) and now remaining in the Lord Keepers custody, was often and ferioufly dealt with, by that truly honourable and provident Statist (of whom hee was intirely affected) formewhat to decline his lofty foaring, left in mounting too high, he should melt his waxen wings against the hot Sunne, and not to suffer the sore to fester till it were past cure; to which purpose also he afterward wrote him a letter of pithy and sapient perswasions, out of the abundance of his well-wifhing heart; the coppy whereof we held worthy to bee heere prefented.

a stander by seeth more then hee that playeth the game; and for the most part every man in his owne cause, standeth in his sure-light, and seeth not so cleerely as hee should. Your Lordshippe hath dealt in other mens causes, and in greate and weighty affaires with great wisdome and judgement; now your owne is in hand, you are not to contemne or refuse the adule of any that loueth you, how simple soeuer. In this order I range my selfe; of those that love you none more simple, and none that lovely you with more true and honest affection: which shall pleade mine excuse, if you shall either mistake, or misconster's morals or meaning; But in your Lord-ships honorable wisdome I neither doubt nor suspect the one or other. I will not presume to aduise you, but I will shoot my bolt, and tell you what I thinke. The beginning and too-long continuing of this unseasonable discontent you have seene and prooued, by which you may aime at the end. If you hold still this courfe (which hitherto you finde to bee worse and worse, and the longer you goe, the farther out of the way) there is little hope or likelyhood that the end will bee better. You are not yet so farre gone, but you may well returne; the returneis safe, the progresse dangerous and desperate. In this course you hold, if you have any enemies, you also that for them which they could never doe for themselues. Your friends you leave open to scorne and contempt; you for sake your selfe, and overthrow your fortunes, and ruinate your honour and reputation. You give that courage and comfort to the forreine enemies, as greater they cannot have. For what can bee more welcome, or more pleasing newes unto them, then to heare that her Maiesty and the Realme are maymed of so ous and facred band, wherein the divine Maieff; of almighty God hath by the rule of Christianitie obliged For the foure first, your constant resolution may per haps moone you to effeeme them as light; but beeing well weighed they are not light, nor lightly to bee regar. ded. And for the two last, it may bee that the cleerenesseof your inward conscience; may seeme to content your felfe. But that is not enough; thefe duties stand not onely in contemplation, or in inward meditation : their effects bee externall action, and when that fatleth, the Substance faileth. This beeing your present state and condition, what is to bee done? what is the remedy? My good Lord 1 lacke wisdome and judgement to adulfe you; but I will neuer lacke an honest true heart to wish well, nor (beeing warranted by a good conscience) will seare to speake what I thinke.

The Earles Answere. (331) My very good Lord. Though there is not the man this day living, whom I would sooner make a Iudge of any question that did concerne mee, then your felfe : yet you must give me leave to tell you, that in some cases I must appeale from all earthly Iudges; and if in any, then surely in this, when the highest sudge on earth hath imposed upon mee the heaviest punishment, without triall or hearing. Since then I must either answere your Lordships arguments, or for sake mine ownei ust defence, I will force mine aking head to doe mee service for an I must first deny my discouragement, which was forced.

to be an humerous discontentment, and in that it was onfeafonable, and is too long continuing, your Lord bippe Should rather condole with me then expossulate. Naturall (easons are expected here below, but violent and onfeaso nable Kormes come from aboue: there is no tempelt to the passionate indignation of a Prince, nor that at any time so unseasonable, as when it lighteth on these that might expect an haruest of their painefull and carefull labours. Hee that is once wounded must feele smart till his hurt is cured, or the part senselesse; but cure I expect none, her Maiesties heart being obdurate; and be without sense I cannot. But then (704 (ay) I may aime at the end. I doc more then aime, for I fee an end of all my fortunes and have set an end to all my desires. In this course doe any thing for mine enemies? when I was present, I found them absolute, and therefore I had rather they foould triumph alone, then have mee attendant upon their Chariot. Or doe I leaue my friends? when I was a Courtier, I could reeld them no fruit of my loue to them; now I am an Heremite, they shall beare no enuie for their loue to me. Or doe I forfake my selfe, because I doe enion my selfe? Or doe louerthrow my fortunes, because I build not a fortune of paper walles, which every puffe of winde blowes downe? Or doe I ruinate mine honor because I leave following the pursuit, or wearing the falle marke of the Chadow of honour? Doe I give courage or comfort to the forraine enemies, because I reserve my selfe to encounter them, or because I keepe mine heart from basenesse, though I cannot keepe my fortune from declining? No, no, I give enery one of these considerations his due right, and the more I weigh them, the more I finde my felfe instifted from offending in any of them. As for the two last obtections, that I for sake my Country when it hath most need of me, and faile in that indiffoluble duty which I owe to my Souer aigne: I answere, that if my Country had at this timenced of my publike service, her Maiestie that pouernes it would not have driven me to a private life. I am tied to my Country by two bands; one publike, to discharge carefully faithfully, and industriously that trust that is committed unto me; and the other private to facrifice for it my life and carkafe which have beene nouri-Ibed init. of the first I am free, being dismissed or disabled by her Maiesty. Of the other nothing can free me but death, and therefore no occasion of performance shall offer it feife, but I will meete it halfe way. The indisso-luble duety which I owe to her Maiesty, is the duetic of alleagiance which I will neaer, nor can faile in; the duetie of attendance is no indisoluble duety. I owe her Majesty Service of an Earle and of a Mariball of England. I have beene contented to doe her the feruice of a Clerke but can neuer serue her as a villaine, as a flaue. But yet (you say) I must give way to time : So I doe, for now I fee the storme come. I have put my selfcinto the harbour. Seneca faith wee must give way to fortune, I know that fortune is blind and from and therefore I goe as farre out of the way as I can. You fay the remedy is not to striue, I neither striue nor feeke for remedy , but I must yeeld and submit : I can neuer yeeld my felfe to bee guilty, or this imposition lately laide upon me, to be inft : I owe formuch to the Author of truth, as I can never yeeld truth to be failhood, or fallbood to be truth.Haue I giuen canfe (you toke) and take a feandall? No, I gave not cause to take up so much as Fimbrius his complaint, for I did totum telum corpore accipere. I patiently beare all and fenfibly feele all that I then received. When this foundall was given mee, nay, when the vilest of all indignities are done unto mee, doth Religion enforce me to ferue? doth God require it? is it implety not to doe it? why? cannot Princes erre? cannot subjects receive vorong? is an earthly power or authority infinite? Pardon me, pardon mee my Lord, I can neuer subscribe to these principles: but Salomons foole laughes when he is stricken: Let these that mean to

Your Lordship in the beginning of your letter made your felfe a looker on, and mee a player of mine owne game; fo roumay sce more then I: but you must give mee leave to tell you in the end of mine, that since you but see and I suffer, I must of necessity feele more then you. I must crave your Lordships patience, to give him that hath a crabbed fortune leave to ve a crabbed stile. But what some my Rile is there is no heart more humble, nor more affected towards your Lordsbip, then that of your Lordsbips poore R. Essex.

Notwithstanding, it pleased her gracious Highnesse (whom he so censureth as wronging him, for lending a more attentine eare to his enemies fuggestions, then to Effer commanhis owne facisfactions) first, to remitte his durance house. to his owne house, and then loth to looke into his faults but with her princely eye of fauour to proceed vntosome moderate censure of his actions, to the end hee might fee his owne errors, and shee so limit

Whereunto his answere was that the State of Warre held it a Maxime, to make good the Stand before the Remove, and that it was onething at Table to direct, but another thing in field to effect, especially in Ireland, whose war was with Boggs and Woods, aswell as with Men. And to he rest of the objections hee answered with such obedient discretion, and loyall submission, as hee well fatisfied the Honourable prefence, onely a fufpension from the exercise of some of his offices was decreed, vntill her Maiesties pleasure should other wise order it. other vertues which are the attendants of Peace; her Clemency, Iustice, and * Temperance: touching the last of which, as in one kind (of her diet and priuate life,) King Edward her brother viually called call her, his Lady her, his Lady Temper : so of another kinde of temperance in this learnedelt of Queenes, the * learnedft of Kings hath given this memorable testimony, that when as France (part of her Royall Title) was in citill warres, Spaine (her mortall Enemie) enfeebled both in power and purse, Netherland ambitious of her gouernment, and Scotland ruled by an Infant, yet in fuch abundance both of meanes, opportunities, and prouocations, so superabundant was her moderation and temper, that shee ever religiously abiteined from all ambitious delire of encrochment. on the rights or territories of any her neighbour Princes. Beeing in this, and those other her vertuous actions, fuch, as of whom that which was fooken of Antoninus Pius may more truly bee verified, that scarcely, in youth shee did any thing rashly, or in her age indifcreeily; scarcely, I say: for as a Creature, wee cannot exempt her from all frailties, as a Woman, from passions, or as a Prince, from all errors, whereinto, cuen against her owne naturall inclination, the might be drawen, either on milinformation. or on opinion of necessity in the State. For her Her Cours. Court, it was not onely a frequent Academie, of as Honourable Councellors, Illustrious Peeres, Gallant Courtiers, Learned Prof. fors, Intelligent Statifts, as euerattended any Christian Prince; but also a Nurfery, where yougue Nobles and others might bee trained up to the managing of greatest affaires, and a Her Councell. Sanctuary where the meanest might finde releefe against the mightiest; because as the Wisest in her Counsell were content to learne wisdome from her directions, so the Greatest were drawen to practise Equity, both by her example and command. Yea, which is more admirable in her Sex, so reserved was fhee from giving any man too-much interest, or being lead and ouerswaied by any of her Great-ones about her, that they all flood in a renerent awe of her Her awe. very presence and aspect; but much more of her least frowne or checke, wherewith some of them,

For their policy was to have Sir William Stanleys prefence to foone as the difinal blow thould bee given, to beea leader to their intended stratagems, whereof (as they thought) they should haue great need, & that Owen should remain where hee was, to hold correspondency with forrain Princes, to allay(asmuch as hee might) the odiousnes of the fact, or to impute the Treason to the Puritanes

(53) Fawkes comming into Flanders found Owen, vnto whom, after the oath, hee declared the plotte, which hee very well approued. But Sir William Stanley (at that time in Spane) Owen faid would be hardly drawne into the businesses, for that hee had suites in the English Court himselfe, yet hee promised to forward him in all that hee could, and to fend him into England with the first, when their proiect had taken effect. Whereupon Famkes to avoid further fuspition, kept stil in Flanders vntill the beginning of September, and then returning, received the keyes of the Cellar, and laid in more powder, billers and fagots; which done, hee retired into the Country, and there kept till the end of O&ober.

(54) In the meane while Catesby and Percy meeting at the Bathe, it was there concluded, because their number were but few, that Catesby himselfe fhould have power to call in whome hee would to aide their defigne : by which authority he tooke in Sir Euerard Digby of Rutlandsbire knight, and Francis Tresham of Northamptonsbire Esquier, both of them of sufficient estate and wealth, had they not abused both to their owne destruction : for Sir Euerard offered fifteene hundred pounds to forward the action, and Trefbam two thousand. But Percy diffaining that any should outrun him in euill, promised foure thousand pounds out of the Earle of Northumberlands rents, and tenne horses of speed to steed them when the blow was paft. Against which time to prouide munition, Catesby likewise tooke in Ambrofe Rookewood and John Grant two Recufant Gentlemen, and vidoubtedly others were written in the same Roll, had these two grand Electors beene apprehended aline, whose owne tongues only could vnfold their Catalogues Record.

(55) The businessethus forwarded by their complices abroad, their Immates did not neglect the supplies at home. For Percy, Winter and Fankes had stored the Cellar with thirty fixe Barrels of Gunpowder, and vpon them bestowed (in steed of shot) Barres of Iron, logges of timber, maffic frones, Iron Crowes, Picke-axes, and all their working tooles; and (to couer all) great store of Billets and fagots fo that nothing was wanting but tall in a readinesse, attending that great and terrible day. Neither were the lesuiticall Priests slacke on their parts, who viually concluded their Masses and oblatory Sacrifices, with their prayers for the good successe of their expected hopes, as by these verses, made and vied by

And others thus, Profper Lord their paines that labour in thy cause day and night, let Heresie vanish away like moste, let their memory periferates acrache, like the ruine and fall of a broken house: Allusions idoubtelfle to the labours in the Vault, the mounting smoake of powder, and the sail of the Parliament house, which if it had hapned, they might have faid to have bin Prophetically foretold by their high Priefts for that yeere.

(56) But the Lord that neuer flipt the deliuerance of his elect, kept this his I frael as the Apple of his own eye, & this pit digged for the destruction of others, they fell into themselues : so that we may | Pial. 124 wellay, If the Lord had not bin on our sides when me roje up against us, they had swallowed us up quicke, when their wrath was kindled against vs; but praised bee the Lord which hath not given us a pray unto their teeth:our foule is escaped even as a birdout of the snare of the foroler, the Inare is broken, and wee are delivered. For this Cockatrice egge hatched by themselues proued a Serpent onely to themselues, and themselues (by Gods hand) made the only Instruments to breake the shell of their owne treaton.

(57) For vpon Thursday in the cuening, tenne dayes before the intended Parliament, a letter dire-Ged to the Lord Mounteagle was delivered by an vnknowne perfon vnto his footman in the streete, with a straightscharge given, to give it into his Lords owne hand, which accordingly hee did. The letter was without date and subscription, and somewhat vnlegible, so as the Nobleman called for one of his feruants to affift him therein, the frrange contents whereof much perplexed the true construction, as whether writ by some Pasquill to scarre him from attendance, or as matter of confequence from aduife of some friend. How soeuer, though it were supper time, and the night as darke as the purport of the letter; yet to discharge his loyall duty, hee forthwith repaired to the Kings Palaceat Whitehal, where he imparted the letter to the Earle of Salisbury, Principall Secretary, and they both prefently acquainted the L. Chamberlaine therewith, who deemed the matter not a little to concern himfelf, the charge of his office being to ouerfee all places whether his Maiefty was to repaire, these two Counsellors shewed the same letter to the Earles of Worcester and Northampton, who together concluded (how fleight focuer the contents formed to appeare, as proceeding from some surmises of an idle and light braine) to acquaint the King himfelfe with the same, which accordingly was done, and was as followeth.

My Lord, out of the love I beare to some of your friends, I have a care of your preservation. Therefore I to the Lord spould adulte you, as you tender your life, to desife some Moniegie. excuse to shift off your attendance at this Parliament. For God and man haue concurred to punish the wickednesse of this time. And thinke not sleightly of this advertisement, but retire your felfe into your Country, where you may expect the enent in fafety. For though there bee no appearance of any stirre, yet I say they shall receive a terribie b'ow this Parliament, and yet they shall not see who burts them. This counsell is not to be contemped because it may doe you good, and can doe you no harme, for the danger is past so some as you have burnt the letter. And I hope Godwill give you the grace to make good wfe of it: to whofe holy protection's commend you.

(58) His Maiefty a while pauling,& then re-reading the letter, deliuered his judgement, that the file thereof was too quicke and pythy to bee a libell bred from the superfluities of an idle braine, and on the instant didapprehend by these words; that they should receive a terrible blow at this Parliament. get should not see who hart them, that a sodaine danger by blast of Gunpowder should be intended by some base villaine in a corner, no insurrection, rebellion or desperate attempt appearing. And therefore wifhed that the vnder rooms of the Parliament house might bee throughly fearched, before himfelfe, or Peeres should fit therein. To which purpose it was then concluded, that the L. Chamberlaine should (according to his office and place) view all the rooms aboue and below: but aswell to stay idle rumors, as to let things ripen to reucale their own mysteries, this his fearch should bee deferred vntill Munday, the day immediately before the Parliament, & then to bee with a feeming flight eye, to avoid suspect.

(59) The Earle of Suffolke, Lord Chamberlaine.

according to the conclusion, vpon Munday in the Nauember 4 afternoone(being accompanied with the L. Montegle, who still thirsted to see the issue) repaired vnto those vnder-roomes, and finding the Sellar so sufficiently flored with wood and coales, demanded of Fankes (the counterfeit Iohnson, who stood there attending as a feruant of finall repute) who owed the place; his answere was, that the lodgings belonged to M. Thomas Percy, and the Sellar likewife, to lay in his winter prouision, himselfe being the Keeper and M. Percies servant. Whereunto the Earle as void of any other suspition, presently replied, that his Master was well prouided against VVinters blafts : but being come forth, the Lord Montegle told him, that hee did much suspect Percy to bee the indirer of the letter, knowing his affection in religion, and the friendship betwixt them professed, fo as his heart gaue him (hee faid) when hee heard Percy named, that his hand was in the act.

(60) The Lord Chamberlaine returning, related to the King in presence of some Counsellors, what hee had feene; and the fuspition that the Lord Montegle had of Perey, and himselfe of lohnson his man; which presently encreased his Maiesties apprehenfion and lealousie, whereupon hee insisted, that a narrow fearch should be made, and those billets and coales should be turned to the bottome, which as he confidently supposed was the couering of some notable intended treason. But some moued the doubt how this fearch should be made: for albeit no caution could be too much in so great a danger, yet the inducement thereunto, being no more then a nameleffe inscript, shusled no man knew whence, and might wel be the enaporation of an idle brain, wold feeme (if nothing were found) fome scandall vnto the State, to bee ouer suspitious of so friuolous a toy, and withall might leave some sad imputation on a great counsellor of the land. Notwithstanding, his Maiefty still persisting in his former opinion, willed that the fearch should be throughly made, and no possibility of danger left vnexamined, vnlesse they meant to goe to the Parliament, and leave the hazard to the euent, which hee thought they in conscience were loth to doe. Whereupon it was concluded, that the fearch should be made; but vnder color of fearthing for certaine hangings belonging to the house which were missing, and conused away. (61) Sir Thomas Kneuet, (now Lord Kneuet, then a Gentleman of his Maiestics Priny-Chamber) was imployed herein, and about midnight (before the very morning when the Parliament was to beginne) went vnto the place with a small but well affected company. At the dore of entrance into the Cellar, finding one (which was Guy Fawkes) at fo vnfeafonable a time, cloaked and booted, hee thought fitte to apprehend him, and entring the place, ouerturned the billets and coales, when presently hee found the Serpents neft, flored with thirty fixe barrels (fmall and great) of gunpowder, then fearthing the villaine that should have hatched these egges, found about him a darke lanterne, three matches and other inftruments for blowing vp the powder: who no whit daunted, instantly confessed his guiltines, and was fo farre from contrition or repentance, as hee vowed, that had hee been found within the house (as indeed hee was then but immediately come foorth from his worker) hee certainely would have blowne up the house with himselfe, and them all : & was so obdurate in his Romish resolution, that being brought before the Lords of the Councell, hee lamented nothing so much, as that the deed had not been done, saying, that the Dinell and not God was the discouerer of the plot. (62) As desperate were Catesby, Percy, and the reft, who having notice that the L. Montegles letter did giue some ouercure of suspition, yet would they stay to fee the successe, and forfooke not London vnrill the fame day wherein the deed should have beene done: Catesby, Percy, Rookewood, both the Wrights, and Thomas Winter, posted all into Warwicksbire.

where Grant and his affociates had taken certaine great horfesour of a stable, to forward their hoped greatday. These meeting at Dunchurch, where Six Euerard Digby had made a match for a fet hunting, not with hounds for the hare(which was only the colour)but with Nimred for bloud, and jurprize of the most vertuous young Princesse Lady Elizabeth, were told(by the escaped) of their certaine discouery, and presently scarred with report of purfuit; when strucke with terror, not knowing where to make ftay, or whither to ftir, they desperately beganne an open rebellion, pretending the cause was Religion, and affirming for truth, that all the Catholikes throates were appointed to be cut. And lo trouping together, wandred through Warwickshire, the edges of Worcester, and borders of Stafford Shires, their feruants and aiders being about fourescore men,&thofe euer ready to steale away from them, more care was in keeping, then truft reposed either in their faith or defence. Yet thus ranging, and finding no relitance, they rifled the Lord windfors house of all the Armour, shot, powder, and other warlike provisions, but the weather rainy, and the waters fomewhat high, the powder in carriage took wet, and thereby became more vnferuiceable, God in his inflice fo ordering the fuccesses, that the element of water, and accident of fire fought against them, as the stars in their courses did against Sifera. Iudge 5,20. (63) For their last fort of refuge, being Hoibach in Staffordfbire (the house of Stephen Littleton) whither Sir Richard Walfb (high Shiriffe of Worsefterflore) purfued them, who thinking the stirre no greater (though so great enough) then some fray or riot, sent his Trumpet vnto them, commanding to render themselues ynto him his Maiesties Minister, with promise of his best meanes (if they so did) to allay the offence. But their owne consciences witnesfing what the Shiriffe knew not, told them the fault was too waighty to leave them any hope of fauour: and thereupon returned answere, that hee had neede of greater assistance then of those few numbers that were with him before hee could be able to command or controll them. So preparing for reliftance, they made ready their weapons, and having laid two pound of the faid powder in a platter to drie in the chimney, one (a Millar) comming to amend the fire, threw in a billet, wherewith a sparke flying out, chanced to fall Fire-working on the powder, whose sodaine blast was to violent, fled by fitt. that (though being of so small a quantity) it blew vp the roofe of the house, and scortched the bodies and faces of Catesb , Rookewood and Grant, with some others, whose consciences then strucken with the guilt of their finne, made them fee Gods fearching iuffice in punishing like with like. Thus being deice &cd with the accident, and now knowing that all was loft, like desperatemen, they there resolued to die together, let open the gate, suffered the Shiriffes followers to rush in among them, and by valour (as they tearmed it) fought for their owne destruction; for both the Wrights were therein shot downe dead, Ambrofe Rookwood, & Thomas Winter were very fore wounded; and laftly, Catesby and Percy refolutely fighting, backeto backe, were both of them flaine with one bullet of musket-shot, (64) Thus these high aspiring spirites, deceived with the spirit of illusion, under opinion of religion, and dreaming of no leffe then destruction of King, Princes and people, with alterations of kingdomes, Church and State, were miferably defeated, not by humane prouidence, but divine mercy. Some prefently flainein heate of Rebellion, others deadly wounded were taken aline, the rest either whole or but lightly hurt, were led prisoners to London, and to other places, all the way gazed at, reuiled and dete-Red by the common people, as some strange Mon-sters of the world, for this their helliss and horrible Treason; and lastly condemned & executed as they most worthily deferued; whose inditemets, arraignments and confessions, I refer to be read in the true

Relations already printed thereof, with fundry o-ther weighty matters thereto incident, in that learned difcourte, written by the most honourable Lord Henry Howard, Earle of Northampton, now Lord Priny Scale. So shall Christ with his spiritual approch beautishe this Church of ours, as with his humane presence in the Temple at Ierusalem he celebrated that VV inters feast of theirs: wherin hee taught that himfelfe was the true fon of God, and the only dore by which all must enter. Through which therefore let vs with Ierem approch his Altar to make supplications for the Kings peace: and with Baruch to pray for the Kings life, and life of his fonne, that their dayes may be upon the earth as the

For my part, I haue here onely pointed at His Maicsties hist entrance and acts, rather to thew a liberty of writing the kingdomes affaires, which never is permitted fauing vnder good Princes, then by my vnable performance to enter into that which requires the pen of some judicious Tacitus, or eloquent Zenophon, and conclude with the aduise of Ammianus Marcellinus the famous Historian : Let other men for experience cap. 17 mere sufficient, and for learning better known write the rest, whom, if it shall please them to enter thereupon, 1 admist to frame their penness unto an higher Stile.

The Circumferences of these ancient Monies being divers and different, wee have in this Sculpture observed, by shewing three Diameters, whose Circles import the bignesse of their Mintage and their figures compared with these, direct their proportions to be of the same as thou sees.

A fummary Conclusion of the vyhole.

Y the affiftance of the All-Sufficient (the onely defence and Preferuer of man) my infufficient abi-lities, haue attained the end of this worke, and my weake vnable Perfon brought to a Period this large Edifice of GREAT BRI-TAINS THEATRE. How acceptable to others, I know not; but with what paines and tranaile to my felfe, my decaied ftrength too manifeftly hath felt, and with what care of truth, the Authorities alleaged through the whole Processe, are my witnesses; whose lines have beene the measures, and Antiquities the matter, that hath raifed the Fabrick vnto this height. The attempt was great, and farre whit (I must consesse) for me to undergoe; which, euen at the first entrance was so censured by the Iudicious, and in the continuance hath to proued: that now it being finished, as the Silkeworme endeth her life in her long wrought clew, fo I in this Theatre have built my owne Graue; whole Architecture howfocuer defective it may be faid to be, yet the project is good: and the cost great, though my selfe hane freely bestowed this paines to the Presse, without preffing a penny from any mans purse. For me to shew the vtilitie of History, were to light a dimme candle before the bright Sunne; or to prescribe a methode for their vics, were, with Phormio to reade a Lecture of Chevalrie vnto great Hannibal, warres experienced Conductor: Bur, as our owne concerneth vs neerest (wherein my pen hath taken the freest accesses) fo let me abridge the whole in a small Circle, and incompasse that briefly, which hath beene related in a farre wider circumference.

(2) Our Land, peopled from Isphet the first sonne of Ayesh, fell vanto those sonners of Genera, who inhatiants of the sonners of Engrey, who simulated the parts of Engrey, whose sittle were most far mouthly knowne by the name of Britaines, At first, naked, rude, and ignorant of the true God; yet no fooner were frequented with the civill Romanes, but that they covered their Cut-painted bodies with Garments ; and shortly imitated them even in their most civilized actions; yea, scarcely was Christ taken down from his Croff but they became Christians; Christianicy, (the greatest glory of any Nation) and among them the Goffell had her first progresse by established authority. Their Gouernment was vnder Kings, and thole of as honourable a respect, as were any other in these West-parts of the World, both in training their Subjects vnto due obedience, and ministring of Lawes for the maintainance of estate. Their warres Warren domesticke and forraine were so managed with Policie and valour, as in the one they valiantly defended themselues against their assaults, and in the other steeded the Romanes in most of their Conquests: which cost them lastly their owne subuersions, when their warriers and virgins were confumed and transported into other parts, whilst their native Land lay exposed to the will of Inuaders.

(3) The glory-thirfting Romans (from a crew of Their first Co lawlesse Shepheards now lately become Lords of queron. the World) were the first that set foot, with displaied Ensigne, for the Conquest of Britaine, and the same first affared by Julius Cafar from the Coasts of Gallia.Which his attempt was so honourable in esteeme of their Emperors, that Claudies (the fifth in Inccel-Hon)holding the Triumph but bale, that attends vp-Their Triumphs. on authority without action of Price, made choile of Britaine to adorne his triumphant Chariot, that this Iland (fited, as was thought, in another World, and but part thereof shewed by Cafar to the Romans) might adde remembrance of name to his forgetfull Person: and to that end, having made hither himselfe, stamped his Conquest upon his Coines thus, DE BRITANN: and voon his aged knees crept up the steps of the Capitoll, to give thankes of victory ento his gods on the day of his Triumph; which, though for a small part of this Ilands subjection, was yet accomplished with more then ordinaric magnificence, and the shewes greater then vsually had beene seene, for the Conquests of farre larger and better knowne Kingdomes. And with as great a care was it kept, whilft the Romans kept their owne greatnes. But when their high-mounted Pillar ouerswayed her owne Base, and the farre-spread boughes were growne too weighty for the tiemme, many hands at once grafped at the Emperiall Crowne, and all of them together tare the Branches from the Body of that faire Tree. By whom also the faire and flourishing Cedars of Britain were shaken, and left naked both of fruite, and leafe. So that now the glory of the one declined, and the beauty of the other vtterly defaced, and neither of them able any longer to support their owne standings, gaue place vnto defliny that would now have both downe; whereby the Iewell fo much defired, and which had beene kept with fuch care, was now laid at flake to them that could winne it, and Britain abandoned by the Romans, without further claime, after they had beene Lords thereof the space of fine hundred vecres. Inuaded by Sag-(4) The next Actors vpon Britaines faire Stage were the Saxons, a people of Germany, fierce, bold and irreligious, as, for the most part, the rest of Natious in those daies were. These infesting with Piracies the Coasts of Britaine and Gallia, grew both feare full and famous in profession of military services. In France they seized vpon the Country of * Bato casses; in Germany by intrusion they unscated the Sueuians; in Holland and Friesland, they incroached vpon the Batauians, and Cimbrica Cherfonessus (now a continent of Denmarke) they made the place of their aboad. From whence they often affailed the Coasts of this Iland, even whilst the Romans held it for theirs, and were often put backe by Stilicho and others, whose praises the Poet Claudian chaunted aloud. But the Romans departed, and Britaine left bare of men, their land wasted by famine, tumultuous vprores, and by bandings of Great-ones who By Pith & Scots. should be greatest; the Scots and Picts (ancient Enemies to their Peace) tooke the advantage, and continually made bloody incursions into their Land,

And albeit a frone-wall was raifed athwart the whole Continent, to impeach their inroades, yet that auailed little, their affaults were fo great. Whereupon the Saxons were lent for, and in their first service freed the Britaines from those raging Picts; The Lands defence then they vndertooke, and the Inhabitants confented to maintaine the charge; which whillt it was in giuing was thankefully received, but once received was vngratefully forgot. And they (like the Rauens of Arabia, who fo long as they are full, yeeld a pleasant noise, but being empty make a horrible crie) emptied faster then the Britains could fill, and ener complained they had not inough, till laftly by furprize they got all into their owne clawes, Then deuided they among themselves the best of the Land, and droue their Receivers into the worst and waste mountaines of Wales, every of their Captaines tharing a part to himfelfe, and of one Emperiall Crowne made seauen Diadems to adorne their owne heads; which long were not worne, without intestine wartes, each of them striuing to inlarge his owne, vpon his next, till God and deftiny againe The Heptarchie fently attempted, but neuer intermitted any bloody cruelties that could forward the same, till they had fet it on their owne Helmets; and their Saxons worne The Saxons con out with reliftance, gaue place to the Danes, when time had worne out fue hundred fixtie three yeeres of their Government. (5) Thefe Danes thus fucceeding (though with The Danes intru no better right to enioy)were a flout flurdy Nation whose many Piracies both France and Bretaigne had many times felt, before they attained the end of this their Goale. For these, multiplying like Bees in the Hiue, the land of their owne nativitie was too little for each to haue a part : vpon which occasion a cufrome was practifed to banifu fome that the rest might haue roome. These Exiles therefore (chiefcly confifting of their youth) fell voon other Landes with no leffe danger, then the falling of a fword out of the sheath, and greenously wounded wheresoeuer they fell but no where more deadly then in England Which for two hundred and eighteene vecres con- Their coming tinuance, they vnceffantly affaulted; fometimes har- ance here, rowing the Countrey before them, and carrying away great Booties to their Ships: fometimes impoucrishing the People, by exacting great summes of Their deuastati money for composition of Peace : sometimes expel-ons here. ling the Inhabitants, and feating themselues in their places: and fometimes sharing the Country with their Kings, and taking vnto themselues none of the worst; but not as other Conquerors to build, fow. and plant, but to lay waft, cast downe, and destroy paring neither Erections for civill vie, nor places of Oratory dedicated to divine. Yet the Garland once gotten by their King Canut, was worne with great glory, and by three of those Danish Kings, Englands Their three Crowne was enioied. The first of them Potent , reli- Kings. gious, wife and inst. The second, illegitimate, an vsurper very agill, but idle : And the third a Tyrant, a Taxe-raiser, lascinious and a glutton, in which exceffe at Lambeth he fuddainely ended his life, when the Land became cleared of the Danes fore oppression ons, after they had a long time attempted, and their Kings for fine and twenty yeeres space worne the royall diademe of this Realme,

These last (which I pray may be last) were the Normans, a people fierce and valorous. whose many Sea-aduentures were so great, in the daies of Charles the Great, as that he went to forfee the harmes they would doe to his in France, which proued so many that Charles the Bald (his Grand- Their attempts Child) was forced to part with the Earledome of and featings of Charters unto Hasting a Norman; Charles the Grosse France. with the County Newstria, vnto Godfrey their Chief-taine: and Charles the Simple with all the Countreys which lay betwixt the River Seine and Loyre, vnto Rollo their Leader, whereof he became Duke, and that Dutchie from him named Normandy, Whence William the Bastard the seventh in discent, in a bloodie field at Battell in Suffex, wan the English Crowne querors victory. from King Harold that held it; when, by changing of Lawes, differiting of Nobles, and bestowing the Lands Revenewes vpon his, he laid the foundation of a glorious Monarchie. right, but fuch as Intruders pretend. But Henrie Plantagenet placed on the Throne, and three hundred thirty one yeeres taken vp in the Raignes of foureteene Kings of his line, their Acts afforde matter of more Princely consequence, their Dominions spread wider, themselves being the lawfull Inheritors to the third part of France, and to the Whole by the Title of their third Edward, and by the Conquest of their fifth Henry. And surely had northectuill diffentions of Lancaster and Torke spent their weapons in the woundes of themselves, those Kings and their Successours undoubtedly had beene double crowned euento this day. But these Roses pluckt off by diffentious hands, and their Branches torne downe in home-bred broyles, their roiall rootes lay as it were dead in the Earth , till Teuder of Lancaffer with Plantagenet of Yorke, gaue them vigor and sappe, by binding both together in wedlockes goulden band. Whereby also the long dead Remme of the auncient British Kings beganne againe to bud forth, and fine renowned Princes of that Sirname succeeded in Englands Throne. The first of them, the richeft, and wifeft King of this Westerne-World: The Second, the forest wounder of the Papall authority; The third, the forwardest in all pious actions. The fourth the feruentest for the Religion of Rome; And the fifth a Mayden-Queene, the most famously re-nowned among the Worlds Monarkes, vnder whole raignes one hundred and fixteene yeeres were fully complete and run. And were it not that the English taine to her olde British Empire after the Saxons and Normans , should returne againe to her auncient Stocke and Name. Norwithstanding Truth bids vs acknowledge, how farre God hath accomplished both these in the royall Person of our now-Soueraigne, the one by his discent from the loines of that Roiall Tuder King Henry the Seventh; and the other, by his Edict, in reftoring to the Iland her auncient Name, Britannia: himfelfe being the first Monarch of the two Kingdomes Vnion, and the greatest of Command, since Cannine the Dane. The Cordes of whole Royall Tents, we pray hand of his Sonne, and Sonne Sonnes, folong as the Sunne and Moone endurerh. But left the waight of the whole should rest vpon fo flender a proppe as mysfelfe: I haue laid my buildings vpo far stronger arches, as by the many al leaged authorities may appeare. For first, the Chards for the most past traced by others, and most of them disulged vnto view, were the foundations of my begunne paines; in supplying their wants with my many additions, and dimensions of the Shireharuest. For the body of the Historie, many were the manuscripts, notes, and Records, wherewith my honored and learned friends supplied me; but none more (or fo many) as did the worthy repairer of eating times ruines, the learned Sir Robert Cotten Knight Baronet, another Philadelphus in preserving old Monuments, and ancient Records: whose Cabinets were valocked, and Library continually fer open to my free accesse: & from whence the chiefest garnishments of this worke haue beene enlarged and brought: such as are the antique altars, & Trophies in Stone, by him preserved from perishing oblinion; The Coines of gold, filuer, alcumy, and copper, of the Britaines, Romans, Saxons, Danes, and English, with the Broade Seales of those Kings since the same were in vie : all of them so followed from the original moddles, and moneyes, by the most exquisit and curious hand of our age, as any eye may witnes they are the true prints from those stamps. The like most acceptable helpes, both of Bookes and Collections, ripecially in matters remoter from our times) I continually received from that worthy Divine, Master John Barkham, a gentleman.composed of Learning, Vertue, & Curteste, as being no lesse ingenuously willing, then learnedly able, to advance and forward all vertuous endeuours. Befides these, some other supply I have had : for my disease growne dangerous, and life held in suspence; it behoued him who had towards the publishing bestowed so great cost, to forward the finshing; and to that end hee procured mee to his further charges an *affi- * M.Ed. &.L. ftant in the lines of our middle English Kings: whose Stories and raignes (by the Iudicious) may by their stiles bee knowne to bee writ with another penne. Lastly for the matters of Herauldrie, the willing and ready paines of Master William Smith, Rough Dragon, (an Officer 2t armes) was euer at hand: and by these hands this building is mounted to fuch an height as thou feeft: which thus now finished, this scanced Epitome, may well ferue thy foote-steppes, as staires to ascend these fine national Stories alreadie finished, and leade thee into the fixth now most happile begunne. Where from those mounted heights. thou maist behold, how Time hath squared the Scones of these buildings : how Fortune hath varied in contrining the Worke : and how the Fates have erected, polished, and puld downe, the Supporting Pillars of GREAT BRITAINES THEATRE. From whose Tarras with Dauid cast not thy lusting eie vpon vnlawfull delights : Nor with Babels King boaft, that this was built by thy owne might: But with Moss confesse that from a fmall stocke (as a graft of the Lords planting) thou art now growne into a great Nation, mighty, and ful of people. And with Salomon make supplication 2. Chro. 6. vnto thy great Iehouah, that the Arke of his Brength may euer rest in this House, & his eies be euer open thereon day and night. With the Prophet pray that this building may be as beauteous as his, the Foundations laid with Saphires, her Windowes with the Emerauds, and her Gates with the Carbuncles. That the defarts of this chefen Zion may be as Eden, and her Hish 51. 3. wildernes like the Garden of God. Her Government Peace, her People the Saints of Saluation, & her Kings the Signets on Gods right hand, successively to fit on this Royall Throne, till Christ the King of Kings shall come in the Clowdes, and from the Raine-Bow the Throne of his Maiesty pronounce vs blessed, and make vs heires with himselfe of that Kingdome which never shall have end. Fato which CHRIST. with his FATHER, and HOLY SPIRIT, three in Per-Sons but ONE GOD eternall, ondsuideable in Deity, be ascribed all Praise, Honour, Glorie, Wisdome, Power and Might for euermore.
